DOGS THAT WERE GIVEN

Last night was the first one of the bench show. There was an appreciative crowd. The dogs knew they were the whole show, and manifested their satisaction in a vociferous manner. Some of the dogs were in ill temper and snapped and swore, after the manner of dogs, at the crowd.

For the most part the dogs were goodnatured. They did not resent, but rather courted, the hundreds of caressing hands that were laid so tenderly upon their

Some of the dogs fretted at the confinement, although the intention is to see to It that they are properly exercised. Many were pulling at their chains. They all knew that they were away from home, and wondered at it. Some showed their resentment in low growls when any one approached too near them. There were plenty who stood up in their pens and looked askance at the passing crowd. e Every now and then some fine-haired and, perhaps, pampered canine aristocrat attered an appealing yowl. One dainty little minz, covered with long, silky white hair, possesses quite swell apartments. It is finished in ebony, lighted with incandescents, suppiled with mirrors, curtained in red silk and carpeted with a fur rug.

Jim-o'-the-Hill also holds levees in aristocratic quarters. So, too, does Lady Margaret, who graces a bower of green and white.

Whatever may be the faults of dogs, there are not wanting those who will testify to their devotion and friendship. Dogs always reveal their true character, for there is never a Janus among them. Indeed, one is often reminded of the trite saying credited to Senator Frye, who declaired, on a certain occasion, "The more I see of men, the better I like dogs."

Two women at the show last night caused amusement by each grabbing up a dog and wasting their affection upon it. They even went so far as to publicly kiss the dogs. This was entirely unnecessary when there were so many pretty children about, besides young men. The latter would hardly have cared to come in and play second fiddle after the dogs, however.

Professor Hunt's troupe of trained dogs attracted much attention, and caused the little folk great merriment.

The work of judging the dogs began at 2:30 P. M., and continued almost to the hour of closing last night. The dogs were led about inside the "squared circle." In the St. Bernards, no awards were made in the smooth-coated class. It was the decision of Judge Mansell that the two dogs entered therein belonged to the rough-coated class. It is probable this may be reconsidered.

One feature that commends itself to the women is the chance of drawing a puppy. Every woman is given a ticket. Miss Semele Groat won a Scotch collie pu last night, which was presented by C. D.

Nairn of Ballston. The list of awards follows:

PUBLIC MARKET.

Interested Farmers Suggest More Time for Investigation.

There promises to be some spirited competition between the Union Market block people, who have proposed to lease the old exposition building for a period of 10 years, and a committee representing the granges of Washington, Clackamas and Multnomah Counties.

The latter have not yet made any definite offers to the city, but J. J. Johnson chairman of the grange committee aptoday that he would gather all the data possible and then make a definite propo sition to the Council. Speaking of the Julon Market Company's scheme, he

"We are not opposing the Union Mar-ket people's plan, except that we think they should explain more fully to the city what they intend to do. A public market block is a thing of acknowledged importance to the city and the farmers adjacent to Portland.

"In my opinion, the Council should be fully advised before it grants the 10-year lease to a private corporation.

"The undertaking is entirely new to us My idea is to correspond with the heads of those cities of the East that maintain like institutions, and learn all we can from their experiences. Then we can form a definite working plan and lay it before the Council.

"The proposition now in the hands of the Council committee does not go into the details of the scheme sufficiently to afford a basis of sound judgment as to its practicability. Also I think the farmers of the country tributary to Portand should be given a hearing in this question, since they are to be as directly affected by it as the city. I am therefore in favor of the Council postponing final action on the question until the advisability of the scheme is fully ascer-

STORY OF A SEAL.

W. T. Vaughn Finds One That Belonged to Another of the Same Name.

W. T. Vaughn, the well-known lawyer, has been a resident of the state for only two years, but he some time ago became desirous of holding office, and, being a Democrat, the prospects of holding an elective job in Multnomah County did not seem very roseate, for this was before the days of Fusion. He finally settled on the position of notary public for the State of Oregon.

There were already several men in the commonwealth holding similar places, out the Governor thought one more would not make much difference, and Mr. Vaughn received his coveted appointment two months ago.

A few weeks ago he told some of his friends who came in to congratulate him on his good luck that he was going to buy a notary's seal as soon as the agent came around. He forgot it, however, until a few days ago, when Judge Northup called him up by telephone and asked him if he had lost a seal.

Mr. Vaughn said he had not. "I have one in my office bearing your name," said the Judge.

"Read it," responded Mr. Vaughn.
"W. T. Vaughn, Motary Public, State or Oregon," read Judge Northup.

"How long has the seal been at your office," asked the notary. "Over five years," was the reply. Mr. Vaughn is now using the seal, but he regards it as a mystery where the thing came from originally, He has never before been a notary in this state, and the oldest inhabitant can remember

The adjourned meeting of the Democratic County Convention last night lasted only three minutes. To be exact it was this morning that the brief session was held. It was 20 minutes past midnight when Chairman John Van Zante called the convention to order and three minutes later it had made its one nomination and had adjourned.

The proceedings of the caucus of delegates that preceded the convention was a different story, however. All the nominations except that of County Surveyor were made by the caucus which was a caucus only in name. The meeting was open to the public and the gallery of A. O. U. W. hall was crowded with interested spectators until nearly midnight when the sleepy audience dwindled away a few at a time to catch the last cars,

It was perhaps the most democratic gathering that Portland ever had as there was absolutely no restriction of speech. Early in the action State Secretary Richard W. Montague, who was present on a proxy of C. E. S. Wood, made an effort to quell the oratorical flood and this met with the approbation of the caucus, but spell-binders refused to be squelched. Mr. Montague made a motion that all the voting be by ballot and that there should be no nominating speeches.

This was adopted, but when the time to make nominations arrived the floodgates of eloquence were opened. Somebody raised a point of order but it was ruled down. Mr. Montague sent a message to the Secretary to know if the no speech section was embodied in the resolution. The Secretary said: "No we did not want it that way."

Although the caucus was tumultuous and turbulent, there was no bitterness and no delegate loss his temper. Every one spoke as often as he desired and there was no limit placed on motions At one time the chair entertained seven notions, some of which were second and discussed but none were put to a

During the nominations of candidates there was much enthusiasm and while the proposition to name a candidate for State Senator was being discussed the name of Governor Pennoyer was received with the wildest applause. The mention of Hon. R. D. Inman's name three hours later stampeded the delegates and for five minutes the hall was a scene of intense enthusiasm. Mention of W. E. Robertson evoked almost as much cheering and after each nomination the vote was always made unanimous with enthusiastic applause.

FUSION COMMITTEE REPORTS. Chairman Van Zante called the caucus to order at 8 o'clock and the Secretary of the steering committee read its report on the appropriation of the offices. The caucus had already appointed this committee with full power to act, but this did not in the least deter a Democratic caucus from having a lengthy discussion on the merits of the report and of an effort being made to vote it down. A vote was taken and the conference report was adopted by a vote of 124 to 43.

John Golden moved that the caucus adlourn and resolved itself into a Citizens'

W. N. Gatens moved that a County Surveyor be nominated. Alex. Sweek moved that the caucus rise and report to the County Convention. Judge Thomas O'Day moved that the caucus proceed with the nominations. Gatens again moved that a candidate for County Surveyor be nominated. O'Day wedged in another motion to ominate candidates. The seventh motion before the House was made by R. W. Montague who moved that all voting be by ballot and that no nominating speeches be heard. The chair got the attention of the body after a vigorous effort and the seventh motion was adopted. What would have been the fate of the other six if a vote had been taken on them, no one knows. PENNOYER'S OVATION.

Then an ovation was given to ex-Governor Sylvester Pennoyer. The chair called for nominations for State Senator. W. N. Gatens moved to refer the nomination of the entire Legislative ticket to a committee. This was amended in divers and sundry ways and was lost together with all the amendents, William Reidt got the floor and nominated Dr. Harry Lane. D. B. Watson nominated A. J. Smith. Mr. Smith was present and he declined the honor. Rudolph Wilhelm nominated Judge Dell Stewart. W. N. Gatens placed in nomination Robert Livingstone, William Reidt said Mr. Livingstone would not accept the office, R. L. Love named J. N. Teal. Then Oglesby Young touched off the fire works. In a rather brillfant speech he nominated Hon. Sylvester Pennoyer. Pandemonium then broke loose. For five minutes the delegates gave them-selves up to cheering. John Montag seconded the nomination of Pennoyer. subject to the call of the Chairman.

HOMESEEKERS COMING.

City Ticket Agent Dickson of the Great Northern has been advised by Western Passenger Agent Denniston that a train left St. Paul yesterday over the tracks of that company with 600 homeseekers on board, destined for points in Washington and Oregon. Through the Omaha gateway, too, the westward flood of homeseekers is pouring. There is no danger of depopulating the East. The wave of immigration represents only the overflow
