

OUTLAW TRACY'S DOINGS AT THE MACELDOWNEY FARM NEAR WENATCHEE

(Journal Special Service.)

WENATCHEE, Wash., Aug. 1.—There can no longer be any doubt that Tracy has been in the Wenatchee Valley and that he is now making his way over the plains to the East. He has been positively identified by reliable men, even to the scar under his eye. He showed up at the home of S. A. MacEldowney, four miles down the Columbia River, about 10 o'clock in the morning of July 30. He stayed there all that day, departing for the Moses Coulee ferry at 9 that night. His every move from the time he encountered the first man on the MacEldowney farm until he disappeared corresponds with the Tracy brand.

THE FIRST GLIMPSE.

W. A. Sanders, for many years an Alderman of this city, and one of the best-known and most substantial men in this section, with a reputation for coolness and calculation, is MacEldowney's father-in-law and was packing apricots in MacEldowney's fruit house when Tracy showed up and announced his identity. Mr. Sanders laughed. Tracy brandished his rifle and informed Sanders that there was nothing comical in what he said and advised him to take the matter more seriously. Sanders sized up the visitor and after looking at his 30-30 rifle and considering his features well, he concluded he was up against the "real thing" and began to make himself agreeable to his uninvited guest as best he could without losing too much of his aldermanic dignity.

TRACY WAS INTRODUCED.

In a few minutes thereafter MacEldowney came. Sanders introduced his visitor by saying: "Mr. Tracy, this is my son-in-law, Mr. MacEldowney." Tracy advanced to shake hands. MacEldowney extended his right hand, with a sneer upon his lip. This was distasteful to Tracy. He said so and informed MacEldowney that he was a dangerous institution to monkey with, emphasizing the remark by shoving him to one side with his rifle.

THREATENED TO MURDER.

Tracy then told Sanders and MacEldowney that he was for sure the real Oregon convict and that he would stand no trifling; that he would do no one about the place any harm if no bad faith was shown, but in case they made any attempt to betray him he would kill them, as well as Mrs. MacEldowney and her five children. He then stated that he was going to rest there the remainder of the day and would accept their hospitality.

TRACY TOLD HIS STORY.

The remainder of the forenoon was spent in conversation between the three men. Tracy told them the whole story of his adventures since escaping from the Oregon penitentiary, giving graphic description of his several escapes from the Washington posse, which in the main correspond with the newspaper reports, but in some instances he has explained matters that have hitherto been enshrouded in mystery.

HAD A CLOSE CALL.

He says he was not wounded at all in his fight with Cuddehe's men, but that the charge of buckshot barely missed him, tearing away a portion of his coat. At noon he went with the men to their dinner. He was there introduced to Mrs. MacEldowney, who is a most charming woman. When the stranger was introduced she thought it was a joke, but discerning the seriousness of her father and husband, and noting the fact that notwithstanding the strange gracelessness toward her, he kept his rifle on the men in position for immediate use, she concluded that it was no counterfeit, and thought the best was none too good for him.

OUTLAW ACTED PLEASANTLY.

MacEldowney went to sit down at the head of the table. Tracy suggested that he generally occupied that position for obvious reasons and that it would be best for him to do so then.

He occupied the head of the table, ate a hearty meal, and was conversationally inclined and pleasant throughout the repast. He remained on the premises until 1 o'clock, had his supper and departed for the Moses Coulee ferry, 30 miles below. When he was ready to go he said he would be compelled to take Mr. MacEldowney with him. He explained that it was a course he was loth to pursue, but that the exigencies of the circumstances imperatively demanded it.

CAREFUL OF HIS SAFETY.

He said only in this way would he be sure that those remaining would not inform on him, and that besides this it was safer to have some one with him, because in case of trouble he could use his companion as a shield from the shots of his pursuers. This brought a flood of tears from the handsome Mrs. MacEldowney and a chorus of distressing wails from the progeny. Mr. Sanders also demonstrated assuring Tracy that in the event that MacEldowney was permitted to remain with his family Tracy's presence would not be divulged until he was well out of the country.

TRACY EXTRACTED PROMISES.

Tracy said he never could stand to see a woman cry and that as they had treated him in a highly satisfactory manner he would leave MacEldowney with them if they would promise not to say anything about him until he would have ample time to cross the ferry and get entirely out of the country.

Four o'clock Thursday evening was fixed upon as the time before which no member of the family should leave home or communicate with any person regarding the presence of Tracy. He impressed upon them all that if he was given any trouble on their account he would find some manner in which to revenge himself even to the killing of children.

DESPERADO'S DEPARTURE.

Tracy then departed, taking a couple of good horses with him. He left two horses there which he said he had taken from a shepherd in the mountains. He stated it to be his desire that the horses be turned loose on the range so that they might find their way back to their old range, saying he had no desire to harm or rob a poor man, but that he was after the rich, the railroad and the express companies. Incidentally he remarked that he had to raise $5000 in a short time to pay the man who let him out of the Oregon penitentiary and wondered how it would do to return to Wenatchee and rob the Columbia Valley Bank. Upon mature deliberation, however, he rejected this plan. He went straight to the Moses Coulee ferry, riding one horse and leading the other. It was after midnight when he arrived there. He got the ferryman up and ordered him to cross him, not telling them, however, who he was. They told him it was very dangerous to cross while dark, and he said he would wait till daylight. About 5 in the morning he routed them out, this time telling them who he was and ordered them to cross him without losing any unnecessary time in the operation. He was crossed forthwith and disappeared toward the east. The description given by the ferryman tallies exactly with that given by Sanders and MacEldowney and there is no doubt that the same man crossed the ferry who deported himself so peculiarly at the MacEldowney home. When MacEldowney came into town yesterday evening and told his story the word was flashed in every direction. Sheriff DeBolt and a posse arrived from Waterville, Douglas County, this morning and are no won the trail, though they are fully 36 hours behind Tracy.

SHERRIFFS TAKE THE TRAIL. Sheriff Keller of this county says there is no doubt that the man was Tracy, and he is now keeping a vigilant watch though he refuses to divulge his plans or his theory. It is possible that after crossing the Columbia River at Moses Coulee Tracy may have turned his horses loose and doubled on his tracks by walking across the Great Northern railway bridge, which is only a few miles from there. It is probable that Sheriff Keller is acting on this theory.

OUTLAW IN A HOT CORNER.

If Tracy undertakes to go through overland from the ferry he is in a closer place than he has been for many a day. He will travel for miles without encountering water unless he steers for the settlements and if he does this he is apt to encounter cowboys who know every foot of the plains by heart and will have all the best of Tracy on that ground. Then, too, there are a great many men in that section who are liable to shoot and ask Tracy for his gun afterwards, and knowing the country so well they may easily lay in some pot hole along the trail and pick Tracy off.

IN A CLEAR COUNTRY.

There is no timber to the east of Moses Coulee for a distance of 150 miles, so if Tracy pursues that course he must take his chances in an open country with which he is wholly unacquainted. Tracy is now carrying with him two 30-30 rifles, his famous seven-inch-barrel pistol and one pocket pistol. It is probable he has abandoned his horses and has traveled over the Great Northern either east or west.

ANOTHER HOLD-UP.

Charles Swasey, a blacksmith of this place, who had been in the country and was returning home on the night of the 30th of July, was held up shortly after 10 o'clock that night about two miles below the MacEldowney farm. He was relieved of $22.17 and some papers. After the highwayman had demanded and received the papers he told Swasey that if he equaled before 5 o'clock the next day he would return and cut Swasey's tongue from its accustomed moorings, saying that he could find his name in the documents he had received and could easily find him.

THE NIGHT WAS VERY DARK and Swasey could not see the highwayman distinctly only as there would come a flash of lightning. His general description agrees with that of Tracy and there seems no doubt but that he is the same man who left MacEldowney's farm at 9 o'clock. The robber, however, did not reveal his identity to Swasey and seemed in an ugly mood. Before permitting Swasey to drive on the robber told him he had a notion to kill him, and then stated that he might go if he would keep still, and behave himself. At one time he suggested that he had ought to TAKE SWAZEY WITH HIM.

The robber held a long-barreled pistol in his left hand, grasped the reins of Swasey's team with his right, and while in this position made Swasey shell out his money. Swasey could see one rifle strapped on the horse; he could see but one horse, but says the robber may have had another in the background or in the nearby bushes.

POSSE TAKES THE TRAIL.

A posse left here on a freight train this morning for Trinidad, but nothing has been heard from it since and there are no new developments up to this time. It has been learned within the last hour that Tracy expressed surprise to Sanders and MacEldowney at the lay of the country here, and it seems he did not expect so much open country here and to the east. In view of this it is the general belief that in crossing the Columbia River at Moses Coulee Tracy to throw off his pursuers if any should develop. Not finding the country what he expected it to be it seems reasonable and probable that he would immediately abandon his course and take the railroad. He could soon catch a train at Trinidad on the Great Northern and it is not improbable that he has returned to the West Side, though it was stated by him to Sanders that he wanted to get to Wyoming as soon as possible, and past events have proven Tracy to be a remarkably truthful liar.

SUBURBAN NEWS OF NEARBY TOWNS IN BRIEF.

MOODY TALKS

Says Something About the Irrigation Problem.

SUCCESS BEYOND EXPECTATION

There Were Complaints Against Forest Supervisor W. H. Dufur.

(Journal Special Service.)

TRE DALLES, Aug. 2.—Malcolm A. Moody, who recently returned from Washington, has been busy adjusting himself again to the cares of private business. He retains his interest in the measures that were championed by him during his service in Congress. Presently, he was foremost in the labor of securing the enactment of the irrigation law, which it is believed will contribute to the development of the Western states.

It is believed, too, that Mr. Moody was entitled to much of the credit for the success of the measure. During his incumbency of office, he brought out to the West men connected with the departments that would come in touch with the subject, and he said: "None of the Western members who were anxious that irrigation legislation be secured dared to hope that it would be successful at the last session. It would have been cause for no disappointment had we succeeded in agitating the matter and gotten things in shape for passing the law at the next convening of Congress. It was believed that last session we could do no more than educate the members up to the possibilities that might come from a properly framed irrigation law. With the assistance of a President wholly in accord with the desired measure, and with systematic work by the Western members, the success came, as you now know, earlier than was expected."

TIME IS REQUIRED.

"I apprehend that benefits will be slow to show to the people, but they will show in due time. Time will be required to make the necessary surveys and reports before the most feasible projects may be approved and begun. The trip of Messrs. Newell and Pinchot, (of the hydrographic department) across from the Dalles to Ontario overlaid, was for the purpose of acquainting them with the semi-arid counties of Southeastern Oregon, so that when the legislation had authorized it, they would be prepared to secure to our state the earliest possible action in the reclamation scheme. The fact that already two or three reconnaissance parties have been ordered to make these surveys during the coming summer, confirms the wisdom of that preliminary work."

REGARDING DUFUR'S APPOINTMENT.

Congressman Moody was queried concerning the question as to the re-appointment of W. H. H. Dufur as forest supervisor. Mr. Moody spoke at the solicitation of The Journal. It will be remembered that Dufur was recommended to re-appointment by Senator Mitchell and Representative Tongue, of the First Congressional district. Dufur's service as a supervisor is in the Second, Moody's district. Dufur's turning-down was objected to in part because it was claimed that the interests of the Bull Run forest reserve, affecting the Portland water supply, were alleged to be involved. Mr. Moody said:

"The reserve is almost wholly in my district and I am as much concerned as anyone else to have efficient service on the part of the supervisor. Dufur is not desirable and I have so advised the Secretary of the Interior. It is not a question of politics with me. Numerous complaints have been lodged against him from various sources."
