Both King and Queen Greeted With Volleys of Cheers and Both Looked Well and Happy---Cool Weather Kept Crowds Comfortable.

LONDON, Aug. 9 .- King Edward VII, | after a seven weeks' battle with death, was triumphantly crowned ruler of the world's mightiest empire at Westminster Abbey at 12:21 o'clock today, and as the crown was placed upon his head a signal was flashed from the Abbey to Hyde Park and the Tower. At these places artillery fired salute after salute, and the reports, joined with the ringing of bells, made the whole city reverberate with ae-

A close scrutiny of the King after he left the palace didn't bear out the favorable impression of his physical condition, and although he walked erect and without assistance his pace was very slow. Despite these signs that his convalescence has not yet ended, Edward bore himself with great dignity. When answering the oath questions his voice was distinctly heard through the Abbey

A magnificent effect was produced when the King put the crown on his head. The moment the glistening gams rested on his forhead electric lights were turned on, making the crown dazzling. August 9 .- Today King Edward VII. of England drove in state to Westminster Abbev to receive the crown which marks his assumption of the British throne. Although the ceremony, which took place today, had been considerably curtailed and deprived of its spectacular side, the peculiar circumstances surrounding the delayed function give to it a news interest that even the original ceremony could not have invoked. "How will the King go through it? What is Edward's real condition today?" are questions that were asked the world over, in many cases with apprehension. When the cables flashed the news that the King had been successfully crowned, the intelligence was received with eagerness and in many instances with a sigh of relief by people of all five continents.

The Oregon Charleston Exhibit Tied up Through a Series of Errors.

The Oregon exhibit which was at Charleston is still in the hands of the railroad authorities. The exhibit was to have been released yesterday when there came another hitch in the way of a telegram from an Eastern railroad company who haufed the exhibit by mistake. This is unfortunate as there are a great many tourists in Portland, who, when they visit the permanent exhibit, are met with a hard-luck story of railroad negligence It is probable that the exhibit will be released today as the O. R. & N. Company is taking a great deal of interest in the expect to become permanent settlers in matter and are working hard to have the exhibit released as quickly as possible.

SALEM, Aug. 9 .- The last act in the prison tragedy which was inaugurated on the morning of June 9th, two months ago today, was had this afternoon when cemetery after a complete identification by the officers of the prison and the convicts generally. The body was received fin was taken into the turnkey's room, identified by Superintendent Lee, Warden Janes, the other officers and all the trusty prisoners as that of Tracy. The body was in a good state of preservation though the face was slightly discolored and there was a jagged hole over the right eye, where the convict's revolver bullet had entered the head. Efforts had been made to sew up the hole before the body was embalmed. After the identification by the officers the box was transonvicts were passed by and allowed to

BODY IN PORTLAND

Tracy's Corpse Guarded at the Depot by the Captors.

The body of Harry Tracy, accompanied by three or the man-hunters, Dr. E. C. Lanter, Maurice Smith and C. A. Straub, of Creston, arrived in Portland last evening on the Northern Pacific train from Seattle. The three men who accompanied the body and two others, Joe Morrison and Frank Lillengreen, are the only ones that were present at the time Tracy was killed, Sheriff Gardner and son, C. M. Gardner, arriving some two or three hours later. When the body arrived at the Union Depot

FEW PEOPLE WERE PRESENT. and the rough pine box was left on the depot platform for some time, as Night Baggageman Smith was not inclined to have it moved into the baggage room for fear that some of Tracy's confederates might show up and start a shooting match. After a few hours he was reassured, and the coffin was moved inside, where it was guarded all night by the three men. The men in charge of the remains were very sociable and chatted freely about the thrilling chase and capture of the notorious outlaw.

STORY OF THE KILLING.

"After hearing that Tracy was at the Eddy ranch we quickly organized a posse, composed of the five mentioned men, and hurried out from Creston fully determined to bag our game. Dr. Lanter and at the ranch from different directions, and engaged the elder Eddy in conversation, who rather reluctantly admitted that Tracy was at his home. Just then we noticed Tracy saddling a horse near the barn, and after walking a little close called to him to throw up his hands. He did not reply, but hastily jumped behind was helping him to saddle up, and made his way into the barn, where he had left his gun. He reappeared in a few moments to make a bee-line down the valley, amid

A VOLLEY OF SHOTS. green, who had made a detour around the ranch, appeared lined up at intervals on a ridge to the west side of the valley, and opened fire on the fleeing convict Tracy did not return the fire until he reached cover behind a large rock, where he took a rest with his gun and pumped lead at us. His aim, however, was not accurate on account of the sun shining over the ridge into his eyes, and none of his bullets took effect, though a number of them came uncomfortably close striking the ground in front of us and throwing sand in our faces. BREAKS FOR LIBERTY.

"When Tracy found that the rock would soon be surrounded and that he was at a disadvantage on account of the sun, he made a break for the barley field with the evident intention of concealing himself until he could escape into the brush beyond. As soon as he left the rock he was again followed by a volley of shots, and it is supposed bones in his leg were broken at this time, as he fell just before entering the barley and crawled on his hands and knees. The field was immediately surrounded, and whenever the grain was seen to move we would shoot into the field at that place.

THE FINAL SHOT.

"In about an hour we heard a shot in the grain which is likely the one Trace fired to kill himself. This was at 5:30 in the afternoon. About an hour later Sheriff Gardner and his son, C. M. Garde ner, arrived on the scene. Then about two hours later in the evening two Wats ervilled deputies came and took up a pos sition on the guard line. During all this time nothing was heard of Tracy, and it was feared that he would elude un and we dispatched Jack McGinnis to Davenport for reinforcements.

THE POSSE CAME LATE. "A posse was formed of about 30 men, but they did not arrive until an hour after the dead body was found the next morning. Just at daybreak, after guarding all night, Dr. Lanter and Maurice Smith decided to go into the field to learn what had become of Tracy. This was a bold move on the part of these two men, as an ambush was expected at every step, but nothing of the kind oocurred, and in a short time the body of the convict was discovered lying upon its side in the grain. Further investigation showed

A TRAIL OF BLOOD, leading from the rock behind which Tracy hid to the place where he shot himself in the barley field. This leads to the belief that the wound in his thigh was received while running the gauntlet of fire, or else while hiding behind the rock. The Winchester rifle, chasped in his hand, is thought to be one that he had taken from a sheep herder, and not the one smuggled into prison for him. The one found in his possession when killed bears the number 72884, and was
