Outside of minor provisions the main point seemed to be the duration of the franchise, which will probably be granted for a period of 25 years from the time the road is completed. A PRACTICAL JOKER

How Sandy, the Elephant, Got the Big Surprise.

One of the elephants with Ringling Bros.' circus, which shows here on Monday, is called "Sandy," and is a regular practical joker. When the Ringlings traveled by wagon an extra watch had to be kept for "Sandy" to keep him out of mischief. He had found out that cattle out in the country were afraid of him, and he took advantage of it every time he got a chance.

When the wagon train was moving from town to town and he saw a bunch of steers grazing in a pasture, he would drop behind the rest of the column. Then he would gather up as much dust as he could carry in his trunk and slip up on them from behind the barn. When he got within charging distance he would blow the dust up in a cloud and trumpet for it. He was worth the circus. The cattle would run as if the evil one was after them, and "Sandy" would come back to the road and paddle along behind the rest of the column as peacefully and quietly as you please. But if they stopped him from playing his little joke on the steers he would be mean and ugly for a week.

Once the tables were turned on "Sandy." One of the baby elephants had been troubled with stomachache, at least that is what the animal doctors said, and the old-fashioned remedies of brandy and peppermint were prescribed.

A gallon demijohn of brandy and peppermint was brought to the elephant quarters and set within reach of "Sandy." Her Souder, the boss elephant man, was

Hope are surprising even the most enthusiastic growers, and are steadily improving, and growers generally are jubilant. The recent exceptional heat, it was feared by many, would damage the crop, but these fears turn out to be groundless. The reason for this is said to be the fact that the excellent cultivation of the yards this year, which was better than ever in the past, the vines and soil being in such excellent condition that a better growth followed. The heat has killed the lice, or, where death did not result, propagation was interrupted, and the hope thus saved from the ravages of this pest, as the old lice do not damage the crop, the ravages of the young only being feared. All indications now point to the best crop ever grown in the valley.
