TRIBUTE TO QUEEN

Holland Will Celebrate Her Twenty-Second Birthday.

(Journal Special Service.)

THE HAGUE, Aug. 29.—Queen Wilhelmina will be twenty-one years old tomorrow and all Holland is preparing to celebrate the birthday anniversary with more than the usual manifestations of joy and tokens of congratulation. For it seems that the love and affection which the Netherlands have for the little queen increases with geometrical proportion to the unhappiness with which, from all reports, the queen has had to bear almost from her wedding day. A royal love match was the characterization applied to the brilliant marriage ceremony celebrated here on that bright February morning scarcely two years ago, but now for the public was mistaken—and the fair young queen also—has long since been demonstrated. It was a bad match; so say and know the Dutch people today. It is safe to say that every heart in Holland throbs in sympathy with that of the queen in her distress, and many are the messages and addresses of congratulation that will pour in upon her tomorrow in accordance with custom, though were they expressions of condolence they might at the occasion better. The attitude of the stolid burghers toward Prince Henry remains unchanged. They never regarded him with a friendly eye. The wedding of Queen Wilhelmina and Prince Henry occasioned no spontaneous rejoicing among them. From the very first their attitude was one of jealous reserve toward the German soldier who had captured their girl queen's heart. They declared at the time of the wedding that the best of German princelings was not good enough for their queen, and now they are more convinced than ever of the fact. At first the feeling was much the same as that entertained by the British people toward Prince Albert at the time of his marriage to Queen Victoria. But there the parallel ends. As time went on prince Albert won the regard and finally the affection of the English people, while Prince Henry, on the other hand, has by his apparent neglect, if not mistreatment, of the queen, come to be regarded by the Netherlands with a feeling of dislike that is as cordial as it is general and unrelenting.

WITH THE CLUB WOMEN.

Important Legislation.
One of the most important things that will come before the state legislative committee will be the question of having an amendment to the present library law, which was enacted through the efforts of the women of the state at the last session of the legislature. In the small towns 1-5 if a mill is too small to make it worth the trouble of getting. The embarrassed condition of the Portland library proves it wholly inadequate to the needs of the larger. With the new city charter to be passed upon, which limits the tax allowed for library purposes to 1-5 of a mill, and the anxiety to have it pass unamended, a new element enters in, and gives the club women of Portland, at least, some legal questions to wrestle with. But for the benefit of the rest of the state that limiting clause should be stricken out, and it is the hope of the legislative and library committees, and the state officers that the club women of the state will be up and doing. Due notice will soon be sent all the clubs, with specific directions as to what is desired. But in the meantime a desire for better library legislation can be agitated and the foundation laid.

TROUTDALE.
It is just as true in club work as in anything else that "nothing succeeds like success." Only about a year ago a few earnest women of Troutdale, seeing the necessity of a respectable resort for the young people of the place, organized a library association. A room was procured and with a little aid in the way of a few cases of books loaned by the state traveling library a well equipped reading room was opened. The growth of the library from that time has been steady and rapid, and at present it is far in advance of many larger towns in the state. Soon after this organization, which embraces both men and women, was formed, it was suggested to them that a women's club be formed, which was at once acted upon. It organized with a membership of 24, and took the name of Troutdale Women's Club. It joined the State Federation two weeks after it was organized and sent its full quota of delegates to the last State Federation. The object of the club is to assist the library and free reading room, and the fact that the club has prospered and more than doubled its membership has very largely been responsible for the growth and enthusiasm which has marked the history of the library work. But the most potent factor has been the thorough business methods employed, both in reading room and club. Among those who spoke before the club was Mrs. C. E. Wade, state president, on "The Benefits of Federation"; Mrs. Ralph Wilbur, of Portland, gave a lecture on Shakespeare; Mrs. Altman of the Jewish council, on astronomy; Mrs. Grace Watt-Ross, on Parliamentary Law, and Mrs. Shafford, on Civic Improvement. With the large increase in membership and the popularity of the library and reading room, the club is preparing for interesting and progressive work during the next year. Mrs. Lou Harlow is president of the club.

Mrs. J. C. Card, who has been seriously ill for the past six months, is slowly improving, and has been able to sit up the past week.

Mrs. Catherine Daly, of the Portland Women's Club, is spending the month Mrs. Levi Young, after several weeks visit with her Portland friends, has returned to her duties at the University of Idaho. Miss Porter, who takes the chair of domestic science at the same university, accompanied her.
