WHITE MEN ARE INDIAN CHIEFS

Yaquis Fighting Under American Leadership

Hanging of John Dwyer Put a Temporary Stop to the Hostilities.

(Journal Special Service.) PHOENIX, Ariz., March 17.—When John Dwyer, the leader of the rebellion of the Yaqui Indians in Mexico, was captured and hanged recently, the interruption to international commerce and the operation of American enterprises in Sonora was greatly checked. The Arizona cowboy was the intelligent and ambitious head of the Indians, who cost the Government of Mexico $2,000,000 in three years. The dan-age to launch investments and commerce was only be approximately estimated. Of American interests in Mexico which amount to $200,000,000 in gold, $37,500,000 is invested in the State of Sonora. In Sonora lies the Yaqui Valley, which has been the principal scene of Indian outbreaks. A large amount of the American capital is invested in mines and the operation of their works and the railroads for conveying ore and supplies to outfitting camps has been seriously interfered with by the Indian War. An former in an War has been so detrimental in this respect. With Dwyer dead the Yaquis will be more easily overcome. General Lorenzo Torres has issued a statement that the State of Sonora is at profound peace and claims that there need be no fear of further outbreaks. A large number of the Yaqui people have been in this territory to form a community of interest with those of their race who are out of Mexico, and it is believed that the hostilities are to be considered, but by constant vigilance it is believed that the Mexican army will be the future afford greater protection to the American interests than in the past.

John Dwyer started a black-list upon which he placed the names of all persons, Mexican or American, of peaceful Yaquis, who were known to have even expressed a sentiment against the hostile Yaquis. An American mine superintendent, one Sullivan, was assassinated a month ago under the operation of this system. Dwyer had placed upon the black-list the names of Superintendent Naugle of the Senora Railroad and General E. P. Scan of embalmed beef fame, and other men prominent in the conduct of American enterprises. When any blacklisted person was captured, Dwyer was quite capable of acting as he did toward an Arizona cowboy, Jack Gleason, who was captured by his band. Gleason was brought into camp where Dwyer was with his hands bound behind his back, perfectly helpless. The renegade coolly walked up to him, placed a pistol to his head and blew his brains out.

A Memorable Eviction.

The death of Michael O'Dwyer of Ballycohey, which has just been announced, recalls one of the most singular and tragic episodes of the land struggle in Ireland, says the London Times. Ballycohey is a townland in the County Tipperary, a few miles from Limerick Junction. In 1867 it came into the possession, by purchase, of Mr. William Scully, a member of one of the oldest Catholic families of position in Tipperary (two of his brothers sat in Parliament as Home Rulers for Tipperary and Cork), who immediately presented an extraordinary form of lease to the tenants for signature. Under this document the tenants were to pay their rents quarterly and to be always half a year in advance in their payments; to pay all rates and taxes, to surrender their holdings at the end of any quarter on 21 days' notice, and to forego all claims to their crops which might be in the soil at the time of the surrender.

The tenants refused to accept the lease, and the landlord in consequence determined to evict them. He took out processes of ejectment, and on August 1, 1868, proceeded to Ballycohey himself to serve them, accompanied by his land bailiff and driver and an escort of 600 stabulars. A large crowd, angry and threatening, had gathered around the principal group of houses for the purpose of resisting or impeding the service of the ejectments, and, indeed, the situation became so menacing that Mr. Scully and his escort decided to retreat to the railway station at Limerick Junction as the nearest shelter. On the way, still pursued by some of the crowd, they passed the residence of one of the tenants named William O'Dwyer, and the landlord, who was a brave and reckless man, decided he would make an attempt to leave the ejectment at the house.

Mr. Scully, his bailiff and driver and a subconstable entered the farmyard fronting the house, while the main force of constabulary were drawn up outside to keep back the crowd. The instant the landlord and his party opened the door of the house and entered the hall a volley of musket and revolver shots completely disabled them, killing the policeman and the bailiff and dangerously wounding Mr. Scully and the driver. The whole force of constabulary then rushed into the house and another volley was fired by the occupants, and another constable fell. The shots came from a loft at the end of the hall. It was usually approached by a steep ladder, which had been removed, and when at last the police mounted to the place they found that the occupants had fled. They had escaped through a hole in the roof to the garden in the rear, whence they dispersed among the crowd of sympathizers which now surrounded the house. In the loft were found, behind a breastwork of feather beds, several firearms and a quantity of ammunition.
