Exercise for Second Day of the Dedication Ceremony Attended With Military Pomp and Splendor.

ST. LOUIS, May 1.—The second day of the dedicatory program of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition was given over to the foreign representatives, and though the exercises appealed to the general public less than the brilliant pageantry of yesterday, they were none the less interesting.

At 10 o'clock this morning the members of the diplomatic corps, the foreign representatives and other official guests assembled at the St. Louis Club and were conducted thence under military escort to the Liberal Arts Building, where the exercises of the day were held.

Former Senator John M. Thurston of the National Commission was in charge of the exercises, and delivered a brief introductory address.

President Francis of the Exposition followed with an address of welcome to the foreign representatives, for whom response was made by M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador at Washington.

There was also a formal address by the Spanish Minister, and brief remarks by several of the other diplomats. The speeches were interspersed with musical selections, and at the close of the program there was a centennial salute of 100 guns.

OLD POLICEMEN FAIL TO PASS

Twenty-One Officers Fail Below Average.

Some of the Rejected Men Were Old-Timers—Chief Hunt Deplores Failures.

The stars of 21 police officers will be dimmed as a result of the report of the Civil Service Commission which has been made public. The list comprises among its numbers several of the oldest patrolmen on the force as well as a number of the newer members.

Chief of Police Hunt says that he is sorry to see so many of the old timers fail in their examination and he thinks their loss will reduce the efficiency of the force. Among those who failed to receive the required percentage in the examination is Jailer Ben Branch, one of the oldest employees of the Police Department. Griff Roberts, who has been an officer for over 10 years, likewise failed to pass the examination and will be forced to retire.

TWO MYSTERIOUS AND BRUTAL MURDERS

Sister of Priest Is Foully Murdered by An Unknown.

She Was Strangled and Then Beaten by the Assassin.

(Journal Special Service.)

LORAIN, May 1.—Agatha Reichlin, a sister of a Catholic priest was murdered in her room early this morning. The assassin crushed her head with a stone. Father Reichlin is out of the city. The robber fled.

All suspicious characters in the city are being arrested although the police believe the man entered for a purpose other than robbery.

The police this afternoon retreated from the theory of robbery entirely. A medical examination of the young woman's body showed finger marks about her throat and large lumps on the wrists showed where she was held in a vice. Both eyes were blackened, evidently by blows from a flat and the face had been scratched. There were several bruises on the body.

The members of the board will also audit the monthly pay rolls of the various departments of the city government.

Wealthy Man Killed in His Home, as in the Burdick Case.

Evidently Made Desperate Fight for His Life.

(Journal Special Service.)

NEW YORK, May 1.—The lifeless body of James McMahon, a wealthy retired contractor and member of the executive committee of Tammany Hall, was found in the vestibule of his home this morning by a milk boy.

The head and upper part of the body were covered with wounds and bruises. There are a number of theories of murder. The police say the wounds may have been made by a burglar's jimmy. Some officers have a theory that the murder was done by a woman, aided by one or more men. The only clue the police have is bloody footprints extending from the house.

The police later arrested Donald Kennedy, aged 24, on a charge of having murdered McMahon.

Peanut Eaters in Cars.

"If I could have my way about it," said a sensible citizen, "I would have a law passed forbidding the eating of peanuts in elevated cars, and requiring the guards or conductors to eject from the cars any person so offending. Men, strange as it may seem, not children, are the chief offenders in this direction. You may see grown men sitting in a car, and regardless of their fellow-passengers, calmly eating peanuts and dropping the shells on the floor. To many persons the odor of peanuts within a confined space, as in a railroad car, is unpleasant, as the sight of the litter of shells on the floor must be to all. But the men peanut eaters go right on eating and so disposing of the shells. Why, I have seen a district messenger boy eating peanuts in a car do better than they in one way, anyhow; this boy put his empty shells into the paper bag from which he had emptied the peanuts into his pockets.

"I have seen men not apples in an elevated car and throw the core under the seat. I have seen a man eat an orange in an elevated car, and not even take the trouble to do that with the orange peel, but just lay that down on the vacant seat beside him. But such men as those I regard as the gentlemen as compared with the grown man who eats peanuts in an elevated car and drops the shells on the floor. Him I regard as well, the peanut eater I would have firmly, even if gently, put off the car."—New York Sun.

SHIP THREATENED BY ANGRY SAILOR

Thomas Brown Swears He Will Burn the Cockermouth to Wreak Vengeance on Captain.

When the British ship Cockermouth puts out from the Port of Portland her captain and the members of his crew will have the most terrible danger that can menace those who go down to the sea in ships—fire in mid-ocean.

Smarting under the lash of a fancied wrong and eager for revenge upon the man he thinks has done him injury, Thomas Brown has sworn to fire the vessel and burn her to the water's edge. He proudly boasts of an incendiary record that caused him a term of service in the dreaded "Black Hole" of Calcutta, but says since that time he has altered his methods and that he now intends to perish with his victims. It is against Capt. Fall that Brown is plotting vengeance and in order that his own sordid passion may be glutted he stands ready to commit tenfold murder with suicide a mere incident.

Capt. Fall realizes his danger, yet believes it possible, by careful watching and remaining constantly on his guard, that the carrying out of Brown's threat may be averted. Sailormen are none too plentiful in the Port of Portland, and Thomas Brown has signed his papers and he must serve. He is booked for the voyage to Callao, Peru, and there is but one way in which he can escape his consumption—by cremating his comrades and himself.

Why Brown Got Mad.

It was by refusing Brown an extra night of shore leave that Capt. Fall invoked the sailor's ire and brought danger to himself, his ship and to the members of his crew. Brown "signed on" here, was ordered to report on board at a certain time, demurred and was compelled to submit to the will of his commander. It was then that he swore he would "get even" and announced arson as his plan.

He was old, he said. He had sailed the sea for more than half a century and even in the regular course of events his voyage of life was nearly done. What would it matter to him whether the hulk of his human form tossed a few days less upon stormy waves of disappointment and regret? Would it not be far better to die, if by his death an end were gained—and that and revenge? These were not his words. He stated his thoughts—his intentions—in vulgar sailor phrases; he stated them repeatedly and by strange oaths he swore that they were true. And this is the meaning he conveyed:

Brown's Plan of Vengeance.

Glady would he suffer the torments of a death by fire if, as a man, he had the satisfaction of knowing that those whom he hated suffered the same as he. Death would have no sting if the grave could bring its victory.

Brown came to Portland as a seaman on the Pegasus, having shipped from San Francisco for the voyage up the coast. Those who know him claim he attempted his fire tactics while en route and that nothing but the lucky discovery of a bundle of his clothing, smouldering from suffering the same fate Brown says he has in store for the Cockermouth. It is claimed that Brown shipped at San Francisco, drawing his money in advance and refusing to work after the vessel reached the open sea.

Brown boasts that he fired a British merchantman in the Port of Calcutta a decade ago and claims to have done seven years' penance in the world-famed "Black Hole" as a result.

When he burns the Cockermouth—if burn her he does—he will not live to pay the penalty for his crime.
