

FEED LOADED DOGS TO THE BAD SHARKS

Scheme of a Willy Chicago Financier.

He Would Rid Cuban Waters of the Man-Eating Fish There.

(Journal Special Service.)
HAVANA, May 6.—A Havana scheme to rid the city of the shark menace, inaugurated by John G. Neumeister, of Chicago, a financier and insurance agent, who spent eight weeks in Cuba investigating the shark menace.

If developed to its fullest extent it would either bankrupt the city or force the municipal council to repeal what is considered one of the most beneficial ordinances ever adopted. The ordinance was only recently passed. It provides for the payment of bounties for the slaying of sharks. For every female shark killed in Havana waters $3 is to be paid, for every male, $2.

Mr. Neumeister was here when the ordinance was first published. He began immediately to "work the wires" between Havana and Chicago. He saw boundless possibilities in the shark-killing business. He interested Chicago friends, and in less than a week the Havana-American Shark Syndicate (unofficial) was prepared to begin operations.

Corroded the Dogs.
The Chicago capitalist confided his plans to a few Havana acquaintances, who told the story. A large quantity of a peculiar high explosive was ordered shipped to Havana at once. At the same time fifty men were put to work capturing and corralling all the stray dogs to be used in the shark hunt.

These men were given authority to buy dogs if they could not be prepared to serve to a hungry shark. Experience has shown that one dead dog will attract every shark within a radius of ten miles. Man-eating sharks are, more correctly, dog-eating sharks. As soon as a shark catches a dog, it kills it, and then turns its attention to the shark. The shark is then killed by the dog-eating shark.

Loaded Dogs.
The syndicate proposed first to feed a few loaded dogs to the sharks. In order that the news might become generally circulated, a few days of this sort of baiting, then the high explosive was to be sent to each of the dogs. A hundred or more hungry man-eaters would begin to combat for the prize, a man in a boat would press a button, and the carriage would explode.

The supply of dogs in Cuba and the supply of sharks in the ocean being alike inexhaustible, the established fact that four pounds of the explosive attached to one dog would furnish the syndicate with at least a dozen sharks, averaging in municipal bounty $250 each, a "catch" from one boat not consuming more than 30 minutes; one hundred boats in operation, bringing in 2,400 sharks an hour, or $600,000 bounty every sixty minutes—why, it was a Klondike game that made the Chicago industry and the stock market seem a waste of time!

The question that is affording the Havana-American Shark Syndicate the greater concern is, which will last longer, the dogs and sharks, or Havana's treasury?

ASKS AID OF SISTER.
After pleading with his wealthy sister to aid him, that he may not become a public charge, Cornelius W. Barrett of this city has petitioned the County Court to pay Xurefa Fanning, also of Portland, to pay from her property $250 per month for his support. If she will not pay it to him, he asks it to be paid into the hands of the County Commissioners, who will see that he is not a charge on the taxpayers.

Mr. Barrett states that he is old and feeble and unable to work, and that his sister has an estate valued at $50,000; that he has pleaded with her but to no avail. He now takes the last resort and brings the matter before the court.

WITNESSES FEAR VIOLENCE.
(Journal Special Service.)
JACKSON, Ky., May 6.—Fear of death at the hands of assassins still holds paralyzed the tongues of the men who are said to know the names of the assassins of Attorney Marcus, who was killed at the court house door Monday. Even women and children venture out of doors with apprehension. No effort has been made to apprehend the murderers. The murdered man's family is going to get out of the country. Sympathizers are taking the same steps to avoid death.

MURDERER KANGS HIMSELF.
(Journal Special Service.)
CLEVELAND, May 6.—Ludwig Sedlitzky, on trial for murder, suicided in the jail this morning, hanging himself with a sheet to a gas pipe. He killed his landlady, Anna Heffner, and wounded the latter's husband. The quarrel was over money.

QUEEN RESISTANCE.
(Journal Special Service.)
WASHINGTON, May 6.—Cuba's acquiescence in the treaty providing reciprocity with the states and coaling stations is becoming exceedingly doubtful. A communication received from Minister Squires is said to be less optimistic.

FOR SHOOTING AT POLICEMAN

Charles Palmer, who, on April 19, shot Police Officer Barnes, was arraigned today in the city court and his day of pleading set for Friday next.

Palmer at the time of the shooting was endeavoring to make his escape, after having robbed several French girls, living in places in the North End. Officer Barnes was called to the scene of the robbery, and saw Palmer in the act of running around a corner toward Third street. He gave chase and when he had nearly overtaken Palmer, the latter turned and fired at his pursuer, the bullet taking effect in the cheek of the officer. The wound proved to be slight.

WHOLESALE MEN WANT INSPECTOR

An Honest Official All They Ask.

Commission merchants handling meats and meat products on Front street of this city strongly favor the appointment of a meat inspector, in the event that official is subjected to certain restrictions and conditions which would prevent discrimination and compel the inspector to perform his full duty. They argue that the sale of diseased meat works no good to commission men in any way and that if an inspector could be secured to act along the lines stated above, his advent would be warmly welcomed.

"All this talk about the large amount of meat that comes on Front street is a farce," said a well-known Front street commission man today. "There is absolutely no truth in such a statement, as when all the meats received on the street are taken altogether they would not be sufficient to supply one of the city's needs."

"I will admit that there is a small amount of meat arriving that are not in the very best of condition, but the percentage of the poor stock will not amount to one in a thousand. This talk of diseased meats is revived every few days by one of the meat packing concerns, which wants to drive all commission men out of the business."

"If we can get the proper kind of an official we would be perfectly satisfied to have an inspector, but such is not the case. Take San Francisco or Seattle, for instance. In both of these places are regularly appointed inspectors of meats, yet the percentage of diseased food that floats around those two cities will average much larger than in Portland."

"The reason that so much poor meat is being sold in this city is because of the action of some of the retail butchers who are anxious to buy the poorest stuff possible and convert it into sausage. I visited a butcher shop the other day and found a veal that had simply turned green. The meat was probably first class when first purchased, but had become unfit for food on account of slow sale, rendering it necessary for the butcher to keep the meat too long."

WORK IN MANY A WHEAT FIELD
Thousands of Laborers Cross the Seas to Various Countries.

Thousands of Italian laborers are able to work every year in the wheat harvest both of Italy and Argentina and make good money by so doing, says the New York Sun. The fact has often been mentioned that in one or another part of the world the harvest of wheat is in progress every month in the year. Argentina, being in the southern hemisphere, reaps its wheat several months ahead of our crop, and has gathered and most of it sold.

The Italian harvest begins in May, including not only wheat but other cereals and also hay. So the Italian field hands are busy from May through the summer months. After the hard summer work at home is over thousands of them buy storage tickets for Buenos Ayres, which cost only about $10 or $12 in United States currency.

The harvest and other hard farm work of Argentina begins in November and ends in March. About 15,000 Italians make this journey to Argentina every year, and after the harvest season is over they return home all ready for the harvest on the Lombardy plains.

The fact that so many Italians go over to Argentina only to remain during the harvest season helps to swell the statistics both of Argentine immigration and emigration. In the 10 years ending in 1922, 582,175 immigrants were recorded as entering Argentina; these figures, however, are somewhat misleading, for they include many thousands of Italians who crossed the ocean merely to work in the harvest fields.

In the same 10 years there is a record of 282,512 emigrants from Argentina. These figures suggest the idea that the Argentine must have four something undesirable in Argentina and so returned to their fatherland, the fact being, however, that about a third of this emigration is accounted for by the Italian farm hands who go home to do their usual summer work in Italy.

Most of the immigrants who settle in Argentina are Italians. A recent lecturer said that the Italians in Argentina are superior in every way to the Italians who have come to this country.

This is true, but at the same time it is no reflection upon the class of Italian laborers who come here, for they are a very industrious and well meaning people. They come, however, for the most part from the mountainous regions of the Italian peninsula, where they have been scarcely able to procure bread for their families; while on the other hand practically all the Italian immigrants into Argentina are from the great Lombardy plain of the extreme north of Italy, where work is abundant, wages are better than further south, and the farmers are more prosperous, accustomed to better food, enjoying some educational advantages and living under conditions that have always developed, on the whole, more energy and intelligence.

Having worked on well tilled farms all their lives, they follow the same occupation in their new home, while most of the Italians who come to us are laborers in the cities or on the railroads.

The effect of salicylic acid as a food preservative has been exhaustively studied by Dr. MacAllister and Bradshaw of Liverpool. Their conclusions are positive that salicylic acid, in the way in which it is used in the preservation of food products, is not only not harmful, but is a preservative to health, inasmuch as it prevents the development of bacteria, which it prevents, would be far more dangerous. They show by their experiments that digestion is scarcely perceptibly hindered by saturated solutions of salicylic acid, and that the effects of small quantities on the living subjects are practically negligible.
