SIGHT OF SAVIOR SAVES HER MIND ENTHUSIASM FOR BOOMING OREGON

Mrs. E. M. Rowley, Made Insane by Injuries in Morrison-Street Bridge Accident, on Temporary Road to Recovery.

Called Constantly for Frank May Who Dragged Her from the Wreckage—Lucid Interval Follows His Arrival.

Mrs. E. M. Rowley, of 1000 Morrison street, who was seriously injured in the Morrison street bridge accident, is slowly improving, although suffering intense pain from her crushed shoulder. For some time it was feared that her injuries would prove fatal, but under careful medical treatment she improved to such an extent that her physician stated that he believed she would recover from the physical injuries but that her mind might be affected as a result of the shock.

From the time she was taken home her mind would wander from time to time and she would continually call for the man who had taken her from among the wrecked timbers. Her family and physician believed that could the man be found and taken to her presence the mental anxiety would be relieved and permit of a more speedy recovery.

The Journal gave the Tip. With that in mind The Journal was requested to announce the facts, in the hope that the man who had assisted the injured woman would see the request and respond in person. The publication of the article caused Frank May, a stage hand of the Baker Theatre, to go to Mrs. Rowley's home and presenting himself as likely to be the man, although he was not certain that she was one of the women he had assisted. May rescued several women and he simply took a chance that Mrs. Rowley was one whom he had aided.

When he arrived at the home of the Rowleys and stated the object of his visit, he was requested by the nurse in charge of the patient to make himself appear as near like he had been the afternoon of the accident as possible. Doffing his coat, throwing aside his hat and ruffling his hair May remarked: "I guess this is the way I looked."

"That's the man," He was at once ushered into the injured woman's room and the moment the patient's eyes rested upon him she exclaimed: "Oh, that is the man."

Although almost helpless upon her bed she extended her hand and thanked him over and over again, saying, "Oh, what a relief it is to see you."

May protested that he had done nothing more than any other man would have done under the same circumstances. Since Mrs. Rowley has been permitted to personally thank the man who she considers saved her life, she is resting easy, sleeps well and is on the road to recovery.

Live Delegation to Go to Seattle to Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress from August 18 to 21.

Propose to Make a Showing for Portland and Bring Some of the Visitors Here en Route Home.

Portland proposes to go to Seattle and make a showing before the sessions of the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, which will meet there from August 18 to 21. A delegation of from 40 to 50 business men will go in a body, take an exhibit of Oregon's resources and engage headquarters at some central hotel, where they will put in four days in the interests of this state and city, and in striving to bring home with them numbers of the Eastern and Southern visitors to see what actually exists in Oregon.

The delegation will be composed of men who are willing to go to Seattle to work earnestly for the advertising of the state, and especially will they endeavor to bring to the attention of the other delegates the Lewis and Clark Fair.

Members of this delegation are now being selected, and arrangements are being made for a meeting prior to their departure, for the formation of a plan of procedure.

An Opportunity. It is believed that this commercial congress furnishes an opportunity of peculiar value, for the reason that Portland has not heretofore been well known in the East and South, and it will be of great benefit to Oregon and Portland to make a good showing in Seattle at this time.

"We should go in a body," said President F. E. Beach of the Board of Trade, "and make ourselves felt. At the last session of the National Live Stock Association, Oregon was given great advertising by the activity of our delegation, and the state was in every person's mind. One heard Oregon talked of in every hotel and cafe, and no state was accorded more attention. Every one wanted to know about the country here, its resources and the opportunities for investments and home-making, and the results were far beyond the cost of the effort. I trust that upon this occasion our business and professional men will realize the good that would accrue from a repetition of the efforts expended at that meeting of the Live Stock Association."

To Decorate the Train. Secretary Shillock of the Board of Trade has suggested that the train upon which the delegation goes be decorated, and that it be made very evident that the coaches from Portland contain a crowd of people who are alive to the interests of their state and city.

The names of the delegates will be announced in a few days, and a meeting will be called so soon as they shall have been appointed. They are to represent the Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

Will Be in Portland on Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 24 and 25.

Monday and Tuesday, August 24 and 25 are the days set for the appearance of Ringling Bros.' circus in Portland this year. These days will be an event in the lives of many a small boy and girl—no school, no work, all play and delight.

Soon will the flaring circus posters adorn the dead walls, and soon will the small boy loiter on his way from work and mentally gorge on the wonders depicted on the show bills.

One thing is claimed about the Ringlings—that they never over-advertise. What they say will be found just as it has been claimed, and this fact has had much to do with the success they have attained during the last few years. Today they claim—and in their claim they stand undisturbed—that they have the largest circus in the world. It employs over 1,200 people, requiring 85 double-length cars to properly transport it, and in addition to their regular circus program, which is built up of high-class novelties, they present this year a new and beautiful novelty, entitled "Jerusalem and the Crusades," in which there are over 200 characters wearing costly costumes, a ballet of 300 girls is employed, and 200 fresh-voiced young choristers impressively sing the anthem as the Christian troops march toward the holy city. Taken all in all, the Ringling Bros.' exhibition is one that should—and no doubt will—be liberally patronized.

On both days of exhibition admission tickets and numbered reserved seats will be sold at Rowe & Martin's drug store, corner of Sixth and Washington streets, at the same prices as charged at the ticket wagons at the show grounds.

SOLD WHISKY TO INDIANS Deputy United States Marshal Probstel has returned from Pendleton where he went to arrest Edward K. Brown on a charge of having sold liquor to Indians. Brown was arraigned before United States Commissioner Halley at Pendleton and was remanded in the sum of $250, which he could not furnish, and in default of which he was committed to jail. Brown was formerly a cement worker in Portland, but he has been away from this city for several months.

THE BABY CAUSED ALL THE TROUBLE

Witnesses Conflict in Their Points, but Agree Infant Prompted Assault.

J. R. Morgan, a waiter at Fritz's theatre, smiled as he faced Judge Hogue in the police court this morning, charged with assault and battery. On the other side of the room stood Bertha Morgan, his wife, her face swollen and her left eye nearly closed by a blow which she testified her husband had dealt her. Morgan did not deny the accusation, but he said that his wife had refused to take care of her baby to sleep; this morning and in a rage had flung the infant to the floor. Mrs. Morgan denied this, but said that as she was tired of taking care of the child continually, she asked her husband to sing a lullaby and rock baby to sleep; this made him angry and he assaulted her. Patrolman Austin said he found Morgan beating his wife. The screams of the frightened woman attracted him to the Morgan home at Ash and Second streets. Judge Hogue fined Morgan $20.

A NIGHT'S LODGING COST HIM NOTHING

Boys Runs Away from Home, After Reprimand, and Sleep at the Police Station.

Crying as if his heart would break, Wilbur Scroggins, aged 10 years, was found at midnight at Washington and Second streets by Special Officer Nash, who took the wanderer to the police station for shelter.

The lad told a harrowing tale about fearing to go home, because of his step-mother's cruelty. He related how he had been driven from home, where he claimed to have been abused. He was placed in the police lodging-room and kept until this morning, when his father called and took him away.

The father stated that the boy had been noisy last night, much to the annoyance of Mrs. Scroggins, who was ill. Upon being reprimanded, Wilbur ran away. The family recently came from Grants Pass.

Though Only Nine Years of Age He Is Full of Business and a Money Maker.

Boys who are handling The Journal in cities and towns throughout the state are making records of which they may well be proud. In addition to making a liberal amount of spending money, they are training themselves in business methods which will be beneficial in future years. The Journal has the best hustlers throughout the state and is daily increasing its circulation through their efforts. Hugh Kirkpatrick of Lebanon is one of the boys who is making money selling Journals and at the same time securing his education.

Master Hugh Kirkpatrick was born in Lebanon, Or., about nine years ago. His father, H. Y. Kirkpatrick, is one of the proprietors of the Lebanon Express-Advance. Hugh has been folding papers in his father's office for several years after school hours. He stands well in his studies and is a favorite with his teachers and the students. He took charge of The Journal business in Lebanon a few months ago and has built up a large local circulation. He delivers his papers promptly and is one of The Journal's most zealous supporters.

ELECTRIC LINE FOR TROUTDALE

City & Suburban Company Has Been Asked to Extend Montavilla Tracks East to that Suburb.

Efforts are being put forth to induce the City & Suburban Railway Company to extend its Montavilla line to Fairview and Troutdale. The proposal is met with interest in that region are materially to Portland's trade, by bringing here the people of Washougal and La Camas.

A considerable subsidy must be raised, if the desired extension is to be secured, and parties interested in that region are now endeavoring to collect a sum sufficient to assure the construction of the line. Expensive work is necessary to complete the line and the track would be laid of 55-pound steel rails, standard weight according to modern ideas of street railway building. The service would be both for freight and passengers.

The people of that locality propose, when this line shall have been built, to induce the county to build an elevated road across the low bottom lands to the river, and put on a ferry, to give easy access to Portland for the people living in Washougal and La Camas.

Only the subscription of the needed sums of money it is announced will secure this important addition to Portland's suburban rail service.

HIT ON HEAD BY FALLING PIPE

Captain Leavenworth, Cut by Debris Thrown from a Burned Building, Lies Bleeding with No Adequate Aid at Hand.

Workmen clearing a building at First and Ankeny streets of debris this morning flung out a piece of iron pipe which struck a passerby, Captain Leavenworth, on the head, injuring him severely. Fire recently damaged the second floor of the building and the rubbish was being cleared. Captain Leavenworth, a miner of Southern Oregon, was walking by leading his bicycle on the walk. A piece of heavy iron pipe which was thrown from an upper window struck him on the head. Captain Leavenworth fell dazed and bleeding to the sidewalk and bystanders who rushed to his assistance thought him fatally injured. The employees of Lang & Co., across the street, rendered immediate assistance and carried the injured man to their store. A long, deep gash in Captain Leavenworth's scalp was bleeding profusely. After a telephone call for the police for an ambulance, the ambulance was sent to the store and the injured man was taken to the hospital.

Emergency Hospital Needed.

When the call for help reached the police station, the patrol wagon was out of service, as the harness was in the shop for repairs. However, Driver Price and Patrolman Vaughn answered the summons and found the injured miner in the drug store. A patrolman assisted him to the surgeon's office.

The fact that a vehicle to convey the injured man to a place of assistance was not forthcoming called forth much unfavorable comment from those who gathered about the scene of accident.

Emergency Hospital Needed. The case is an example of the necessity of a police ambulance and an emergency hospital.

Captain Leavenworth is a miner from Gold Hill, Or., where he is interested in several properties. He is in the city visiting friends at Irvington.

Following the accident the police investigated the matter but were unable to find the person who had thrown the iron pipe to the walk.
