SAN FRANCISCO DEFEATED THE BROWNS—HOW BARNEY DREYFUS SECURED FRED CLARKE. . .

EDITED BY J. A. HORAN

THEY COULD NOT HIT HODSON

The San Francisco Twirler Holds the Portland Batters Down to Four Well-Scattered Hits.

Irwin's Men Bunch Hits on Thielman—The Browns Pull Off Three Very Fast Double Plays.

(Journal Special Service.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 21.—The Portland Browns failed to bring their batting eyes with them yesterday and their inability to find George Hodson's delivery for more than four hits cost them the game.

Thielman pitched a strong game, but the 'Frisco batters found him in bunches which, with an unfortunate base on balls now and then, allowed the hirelings of Henry Harris to score more frequently than they were entitled to.

Shay, the first man up in the first inning, went out. Pat Meaney managed to work the Portland twirler for a pass and scored on hits by Irwin and Leahy, the latter's swat going through Hurlburt's legs, allowing Irwin to score. A lightning double play from Andy Anderson to Van Buren prevented any more scoring in that session.

Another double play prevented the Saints from scoring more than one run in the second. Krug, Lynch and Delmas hit safely and Krug was registered. Hodson attempted to bunt with Lynch on third and Delmas on first and popped a fly to Thielman, who, if he had been a little quicker, would have started a triple; instead of a double play, as it was, he tossed the ball to Francis, getting Lynch, but too late to catch Delmas at first.

Blake threw Shay out at the plate in the fourth when that worthy attempted to score on Irwin's fly, thus completing the third double play of the game. Delmas walked in the sixth and stole second and scored on Shay's single.

Irwin's men put the Browns out of the running the seventh when they landed on Thielman's curves for four hits, which, with Delmas' sacrifice and a base on balls to Hodson, netted 'Frisco three runs.

The Browns scored their only run in the eighth when Shea negotiated the only pass issued by Hodson. Thielman hit for two bases and Hurlburt's bounder to Pabst allowed Shea to score. Up to this inning the Browns had not got a man past second.

McFarlan will pitch for Portland today and Iberg for San Francisco.

Ike Butler arrived this morning and will pitch tomorrow. Manager Vigneux also expects a new pitcher named Loucks to join him in a few days. The score follows:

DIAMOND GLISTENINGS

The 'Frisco lads turned the tables on the Browns yesterday.

Anderson made another of his brilliant stops yesterday and completed a double play on the chance.

Sam Morris will join the Browns this week. Manager Vigneux telegraphed for him yesterday.

Vess Loucks is due in 'Frisco tomorrow and will probably pitch Sunday's game.

Alemang is very popular with the St. Paul fans.

Toledo wants Jones, released by Indianapolis.

Every member of the St. Paul team is confident of the pennant.

Most any old ball player out of a job can find work at Cincinnati.

Only six hits were made off Powell in 15 innings at St. Louis Friday.

Some general all-around stars have come to the front this season in the Eastern. Atherton, of Buffalo, is probably the most notable. Starting the season as a pitcher he first went into the outfield; was one of the leading right fielders of the league, and from the outfield he took up the position at second base and played eight games, and in recent contests he has been playing at first and leads the first baseman in fielding, not having made an error in nine games.

There was a remarkable game played at Victoria last Tuesday. Emerson, who pitched for the local team, fanned 19 batters, and Holmes, who tossed the ball for Port Angeles, 11. Victoria won the game by the score of 6 to 0.

Hugh Jennings is out of the game with a broken arm.

Castro has made 10 hits in the last four games for Baltimore.

BARNEY DREYFUSS IN TALKATIVE MOOD

The Pittsburg Magnate Who Then Owned the Louisville Club Tells How He Secured Fred Clarke.

Paid Only $200 for the Great Player and Considers It the Best Bargain He Has Ever Made.

If Barney Dreyfuss had not missed a train perhaps Pittsburg would never had Fred Clarke. Barney now considers it lucky to miss trains, and would probably be willing to miss one train every day if he could pick up a gem in the rough as he did Fred Clarke in the South.

"Yes, it was very funny how I first got a sight of Clarke years ago," said he. "It is funnier, too, how I came to take a liking to him, for his team's showing on the day I saw him was not enough to make me warm up. His team was walloped by a score of something like 22 to 0.

"It was in the summer of 1894 that I was coming through the South, and got held up in Memphis, Tenn., through missing my connections. Of course, my first shoot was for the base ball grounds, where Savannah was booked to meet Memphis. I always liked to look over the young fellows and keep the best of them in view for an emergency. I knew the managers of both teams, but, when the boys got working I did not feel favorably impressed with any of them. 'Tub' Welch was to do the catching for Savannah, but at the last moment he sent word that he was sick and could not come to put on a uniform. This left Manager McCloskey in a nice hole, for he had not another catcher on the team.

"Finally Mac called on a young fellow who had been chasing punk hits in left field. The lad, who seemed undersized for a ball player, wore a fierce mustache. It was Fred Clarke. After a brief talk he agred to go behind the bat and catch the game. I learned before the game went very far that it was the very first time the boy had ever worked as a catcher, and this made me look at him carefully. It was nothing but a slaughter of the innocents.

"The Savannah team was to the bad the moment they stepped on the diamond, and the score rolled up was fearful. The willing young catcher, however, did creditable work behind the bat, and when at bat he made some nice hits. He seemed to conduct himself like a ball player—a little green, perhaps, yet, but he looked like if he might learn the game.

"When I returned to Louisville we were not doing good work with our team, and I looked them over carefully for a place to break in. I was always for improvement in base ball and did not believe in keeping a tight clutch on the old fellows. Billy Barnie, then our manager, was for sticking ever to the old-timers. He seemed to labor under the impression that baseball knowledge was tied up in a few hands and that the young fellows must wait until the old fellows died before they attempted to break into the game.

The Louisville team was then composed of Bill Brown, Fred Pfeffer, Danny Richardson, Jerry Denny, Tom Brown, Larry Twitchell and Pete Browning. Now, there was a heavy team. They surely had the age and experience, but I didn't care for this if they could not win a few games. They did not seem to do much, so I insisted on a change. Barnie was against changing the team, but finally I made up my mind that I wanted to instill a little new blood in the Colonels' make up and I wired to Savannah for the young fielder who caught the game I saw. I asked the price and was told that $200 would be about all. I sent the money and asked that Clarke be sent here at once.

"The day Clarke arrived I had some trouble. The boys had heard he was coming and, to tell the truth, they did not like it, and were ready for révolt. I gave orders that Clarke was to be played in left field in place of Twichell that day, but when the lad came to dress he found ther was not a uniform in the club-house that would fit him. The best he could do was to put on one of Twichell's uniforms, and he did so with a grin.

"When he came on the field he surely made a hit. He had to roll the pants up about a foot, and also had to take in a yard or so of the blouse, but the boy was determined to play, if it cost him his life, for he seemed to think that the cards had been stacked against him. Until they move Louisville across the river that game will never be forgotten by the people of Louisville.

"Philadelphia was the attraction that day, and up until that time Weyhing had been our "Jonah." Clarke was placed pretty well up in the batting list, and as he ambled his way to the plate Weyhing almost took a fit. Imagine Tommy Leach coming to the bat wrapped up in Wagner's uniform and you will have a good idea of what Clarke looked like that day. The only thing formidable looking about him was his mustache.

"Weyhing guyed the youngster and made all kinds of fun of him, and the crowd in the grand stand began to call Clarke 'Pants,' and shouted questions up to me to where I had picked up this foundling. I said nothing, but waited for Weyhing to pitch the ball. Clarke never waited. He saw the first one was good and he took a shot at it. I shan't forget that hit.

"It tore over Weyhing's head and went like a bullet for a single. 'Pants' stole second, and from that moment the Louisville fans took him to their hearts. But 'Pants' was not through with that day's work yet. He made four hits that day, one of them a sharp hit to short, which he beat out by a step. The fact that Twitchell's pants came down to his ankles did not fease him in the least bit. He won the game for Louisville—the first game we had won from Weyhing that season—and his batting and fielding put some life in the team that had been dead.

"Down in Louisville they refer to Fred Clarke yet as 'Pants,' because of his first appearance in Larry Twitchell's togs. I have made some lucky investments in my time, but I consider that $200 that I spent for Fred Clarke about my best."

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

The Question of Unionism and Non-Unionism Discussed.

To the Editor of The Journal—I see by a recent date of your paper that certain parties are endeavoring to supply this Coast with non-union men. The parties in question do not seem to know that this Coast is already overrun with that class of men. Non-union men are today getting from 25 to 50 cents less per day than union men, and are compelled to work from one to two hours longer than union men work. Non-union men have no support, no protection, whereas union men are fortified and if they will stand firm their unons can never be disrupted, and in the near future we will all be organized under one general head and then there will be no non-union men.

The parties above referred to seem to take delight in attacking the weaker unions. They seem to think if they can only do away with the streetcar men's union and the sawmill men, etc., that they will have gained a great victory. So far as the sawmill men are concerned they have never been very well organized on this Coast, and I think a supply of new men from the East would tend to strengthen their union, as all organized labor has been forced by oppression to organize for protection.

Why do the gentlemen who desire the wholesale slaughter of union men not tackle the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen or the Engineers' and Firemen's Unions? Why pounce upon some weak body of men who for the purpose of protecting themselves and families have organized? Let any one who desires to know the condition of non-union men in Portland visit the World's Fair grounds and question the laborers there as to the amount of wages they receive, and the number of hours they work. They are not getting as much by 25 to 50 cents for 10 hours' work as union men receive for eight hours' work. Unionism is a good kind of ism, but non-unionism is no ism at all. "In union there is strength," and when all of the different unions consolidate, as they undoubtedly will, there will be no non-union men to be used as tools to disrupt the pleasure and happiness of their fellow workers. But it will take more oppression to bring them rightly to see the situation in its true light. The gentlemen in question do not seem to be aware of the fact that there are more union men on the Eastern Coast than there are here. Nor do they seem to credit them with a great amount of honor, when they think they can use them to displace men who have organized for the sole purpose of doing away with the lash and to keep the wolf from their doors. I believe the men on the Eastern Coast are too honorable to allow themselves to be handled in any such manner—they have fought in the battle for freedom—that precious jewel, and they are willing to give to others all of the rights that they claim for themselves.

I am aware of the fact that in some instances the unions have become somewhat disrupted, but that is because all unions are not consolidated, and we must be careful, for capital is hunting our weak places, and always ready to take advantage of them. When we quarrel among ourselves capital sits upon her throne and smiles. She knows that wealth in a short time, with one little brush of her hand, can sweep us from the face of the earth.

I believe it was Washington who said: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." If we cannot trust one another, we cannot nor will not be trusted. We must look out for our own welfare or our cause for freedom and justice is gone.

WES MAYFIELD.
