Why Pay High Price for Watch Repairing
When you can get the best work for little money at 311 DEKUM BUILDING.

HAS GROWN WITH LEAPS AND BOUNDS

It was only two years ago that Paul Strain opened a small clothing and tailoring establishment on Washington street between Fourth and Fifth. It was really a diminutive place, in childish prattle, "not bigger than your fum," but it didn't remain small for very long. He soon saw that there was a large field here for him to oprrate in, and within a month he had made one enlargement of the place, and a month later, still another. Then along about the fifth month it was found necessary to double the store capacity, and this was accomplished without much fuss. It was a regular thing in the Washington street house to exclaim, "We haven't room enough yet," and as it was impossible to add further store room at that location the management concluded to look elsewhere for another building. This was secured at the northeast corner of Third and Burnside, on payment of a bonus to the then occupant of the place, and within a short time the doors of another institution had been opened and filled with men's apparel. The sales have amounted to thousands of dollars per week more than was anticipated at the first. Both establishments have had almost unexampled careers in the magnitude of sales.

The opening of the season has been auspiciously ushered in. Large stocks of clothing, bought at discounts, have been moving at tremendous speed, and now a new record is to be made by the sale that will begin tomorrow morning. The story of this proceeding is told in the advertising columns.
