FIGHTING FOR CHILD OF DEAD DAUGHTER

Depositions are being taken before George W. Joseph, acting as a commissioner of the superior court of King county, Washington, in the case of J. B. Bridges, a well-known architect of Portland, for the possession of his grandchild, who is now in the custody of a man named Reed, who holds a minor city office in Tacoma. The grandchild is the daughter of the late W. St. Barnes, for several years manager of the Portland agency of Thiel's detective service, and afterwards manager of the Seattle agency, and the deceased daughter of Mr. Bridges. Barnes was drowned in Elliott bay while attempting to board a steamer bound from Seattle to Tacoma a few months ago. His wife died several years ago.

Edward Mendenhall, who appears before the commissioner as attorney for Mr. Bridges, says the child is wrongfully withheld by Reed. Before Mrs. Barnes' death, he says, both she and her husband agreed to give the child to her father, as they thought that he was the proper person to care for it. Some time afterward Barnes demanded money from Bridges, and failing to get it because he had already been given a large sum, he went to the house during the absence of Bridges and stole the child and took it to Seattle. After the death of Barnes, Reed applied for letters of administration of his estate and took possession of the child. Attorney Mendenhall appeared before the Seattle court in the case and the plea was set up by Reed that as Bridges was a non-resident of the state he was not entitled to possession. Mendenhall asserted that the child should be awarded to Bridges, as he was the nearest relative and the best able to care for it. He secured the appointment of Mr. Joseph as commissioner and returned to Portland to secure depositions to support his contention. The depositions to be taken are those of William Gadsby, Tyler Woodward, Circuit Judge M. C. George, L. Gerlinger and Wm. William Koehler. The depositions will relate to the gift of the child to Bridges by both of its parents and as to his qualifications to care for it. The child is 7 years old.

MONTAVILLA BREAKS QUARANTINE RULES

Several complaints of violations of the quarantine rules of the county board of health by residents of Montavilla were investigated by County Health Officer Evans, Sunday, and the families that failed to observe the regulations by allowing their afflicted children to run about after they had been excluded from school were notified to keep them at home. Mr. Evans says that no serious infraction of the rules had been committed. Scarlet fever had been somewhat prevalent in Montavilla, and upon the receipt of the attending physician's certificate the other children of the family from which the case was reported were at once excluded from the school. Their parents did not understand the law requiring them to be within doors, and they were allowed to run about, and other children were exposed. The physicians who were seen by Mr. Evans said that hereafter when they were called upon to attend cases of infectious diseases they would carefully explain the law to the parents so that the quarantine regulations may be followed to the letter, and there will be no danger of further complaints.

HIGHWAYMAN GETS BLOW ON THE JAW

Karl Gronstadt of the U. S. S. Heather had an interesting experience with an amateur highwayman at the foot of East Washington street last night. The thug feigned drunkenness, and as he staggered up to his intended victim ordered his hands up. While the thief was searching Gronstadt's pockets the latter dealt him a well-directed blow on the jaw, and before he secured anything the thug ran away and disappeared in the darkness.

WASCO WAKING UP.

Wasco, Or., Jan. 19.—At a special election last Saturday the city of Wasco, with only seven dissenting votes, decided to issue bonds for the construction of water works and a sewer system.

NEW ASSOCIATION NOT ON WARPATH

PRESIDENT HANLEY SAYS OREGON CATTLEGROWERS ASK JUST TREATMENT ONLY—OREGON A STRONG STOCK-BREEDING STATE—NO HURRY TO GO HOME.

"We are organized through necessity," explained William Hanley of Burns, Or., the president of the Oregon Cattlegrowers' association. "In this day and age everything is organized and it is only by concerted action that we can hope to accomplish anything. The new association does not wish to go on record as being on the warpath or out after the railroad companies, but of course if any condition exists that we consider unjust we will surely make ourselves heard."

"As a whole, I believe the members of the association are satisfied with existing conditions as regards the transportation companies. Of course, there are instances where individuals consider themselves mistreated." Mr. Hanley declares that the cattle industry, in which nearly half the farmers and other producers of Oregon are interested, is behind almost every other business in the state. "Oregon is a strong breeding state," he continued, "one of the strongest in the West. It is the home of the little calf. It is not as well prepared for the development of the animal as some of the other states, however."

"Our plan is to interest the department of forestry in the just distribution of grazing lands in the forest reserves, advocating the policy that the country from which the reserve is taken shall have first say or preference." Mr. Pinchot declares that this scheme is one of the best that has been advanced. "For my part, I believe this plan will prove satisfactory, for the people of the county will pay its taxes and should be given precedence over outsiders."

Mr. and Mrs. Hanley are the imperial, and expect to remain in Portland at least two weeks longer. "This is my annual vacation," said Mr. Hanley, "and I am in no hurry to get home."

CORVALLIS WHITE IN SNOW.

(Journal Special Service.) Corvallis, Or., Jan. 19.—The first snow that has visited this section of Web-foot this winter fell last night. This morning the ground is white and still the feathery flakes are falling. The usual "slush" accompanies the snow, rendering the sidewalks a menace to the traveling public, and eliciting many a growl from the native Oregonians.

Personal Mention. Bishop Cranston of Portland delivered two splendid sermons in the M. E. church here Sunday. Large audiences enjoyed these discourses, which are in the nature of an event in the smaller towns where speakers of prominence are seldom to be heard.

Miss Edna Irvine has been visiting in Salem the past week. Mrs. Frank Abram Powell returned to her home in Salem, Saturday, after a visit with her sister, Mrs. H. S. Pernot. Mrs. R. W. Taylor has returned from Portland, where she has been receiving medical treatment. Mrs. G. W. Fuller was given a surprise party at her home a few evenings ago. The event was very pleasant.
