that no honey will be shipped from Southern California this year unless rain comes very soon. M. H. Mendelson, a large California honey man, reports that the bees are dependent on heavy rains, and they must come soon. The greater portion of Southern California honey is of the sage variety. The sage blossoms come about April 1, and the honey crop depends very largely on the amount of sage flowers. Eucalyptus has bloomed well in Southern California this year, and in sections where this blossom is available and in the orange districts bees will have an advantage. The out put of extracted honey is expected to be very small this year. Smelt is Eigher. The receipts of Columbia river smelt are still very small, and today the few artivals were easily disposed of at sc a pound.
