

CRAZED NEGRO'S DESPERATE DEED

WHILE INTOXICATED, A. H. JOHNSON SHOTS OFFICER GOLTS AND THEN KILLS HIMSELF - WAS WANTED FOR ASSAULTING HIS LANDLADY.

Crazed with drink, A. H. Johnson, a negro, who resided at 33 North Seventh street, attempted to murder Patrolman John A. Golts and then committed suicide by shooting himself through the right temple. Patrolman Golts, who was shot through the left forearm, had gone to serve a warrant on Johnson for an assault on his landlady, Mrs. J. W.

JOHN A. GOLTS.
The Patrolman Who Was Wounded by a Desperate Negro Yesterday.

Frazier, last Sunday night. Mrs. Frazier had a warrant sworn out for Johnson's arrest, and the patrolman was entering the house when the negro opened fire.

Johnson has been in Portland several months. He conducted the Cuban Steam Dye Works at 33 North Seventh street. Last Sunday he is said to have started on a spree, and while intoxicated made a dash at Mrs. Frazier. She narrowly escaped a serious wound.

When Patrolman Golts reached the house where Johnson roomed he first knocked at the front door, and receiving no answer, walked around to the back door, but no one replied. Golts then forced the back door and as he was about to step in the kitchen cried, "Hello." The answer was a shot from an old-fashioned .40 Colt's revolver. The bullet hit the patrolman in the left forearm, grazed his body and struck in the door.

Golts did not have his revolver with him, and ran across the street to get a gun and come back after his man. As he was running he heard another shot. When he noticed how badly he was injured he decided to go to the police station and have his wound dressed. Dr. Zan was called, and the wounded officer was taken to St. Vincent's hospital. Dr. Zan stated that the injured patrolman will soon be able to be around. The bullet passed through the fleshy part of the arm, just below the elbow.

Johnson had been drinking for several days. The following note was found in his pocket by Deputy Coroner A. L. Finley:

"Mr. Murray Ford, Atlanta, Ga.,
Portland, Or., Feb. 16, 1904.

"Dear Cousin—I am in Portland. This is the last letter that you will ever hear from me, for this day I will die. Your cousin,

"A. H. JOHNSON."

Mr. Finley stated this morning that he would write Murray Ford at Atlanta. No disposition will be made of Johnson's body until word is received from Ford.

SALOONS FIGHT LOCAL OPTION

LIQUOR DEALERS HOLD MEETING TO DEFEAT DESIGN OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE - THE LATTER WILL RAISE A CAMPAIGN FUND - DIVERSITY OF OPINION.

At the meeting of the Retail Liquor Dealers' union at Alisky hall this afternoon, the saloonmen of Portland were out in force. Louis Dammasch, the president of the union, defining the position of the liquor dealers, said:

"Our meeting is for the purpose of making plans and raising money to defeat the local option movement. The saloonmen of the state represent a power which, if united, can overcome the effort being made to wipe them out of existence."

"We have the wholesale liquor dealers and the brewers at our back, and can raise plenty of funds to make war against the enemy. We will appoint agents in all parts of the state to look after our interests. It is simply a matter of getting votes and being alert. Unless the saloonmen make an effort to stand off the work of the local option and prohibition element we may have a march stolen on us and the state be placed in the same class as Kansas or some of the New England states."

"The saloon-keepers of Portland represent a class that are paying a great per cent of the revenues of the city and are entitled to consideration at the hands of the taxpayers."

Rev. G. L. Tufts, representing the Anti-Saloon league of America, working for local option. He has organized the temperance element and secured a sufficient number of voters to sign the petition under the law to make the matter an issue at the June election.

The prohibition party is an active supporter of the anti-saloon movement. B. Lee Paget, an enthusiastic conference worker, in speaking of the matter, said:

"The prohibition party will place a ticket in the field at the coming election. We have for years been working in the state and our following is being increased each year. The local option people are working independent from the prohibitionists, and are in a measure opposing to themselves the results of the sentiment for prohibition we have worked up. We are in a position where we must support the local option movement, as it is a move for reform, yet it left to the prohibition element at this time the local option matter would not be brought to the front."

With American battleships scattered from Seoul to Peru and from Beirut to Colon, Mr. Hobson's $1,000,000 navy does not look so unnecessary.

The Gay Young Prince Yee of Korea

From the Chicago Tribune.
He was a sad flit—that pale, yellow, little royal prince, who, until recently was a student at the Ohio Wesleyan university, Delaware, Ohio. Prince Yee is his name, and there is but a single feeble life between him and what may be left of the ancient throne of Korea, after Russia and Japan get through with it.

Prince Yee is 23. The first 13 years of his life he spent in the royal palace at Seoul, which is the strangest possible jumble of Oriental splendor and Occidental trash. In the audience chamber of Li Shi, his imperial father, for instance, two cheap American chromes hang on the walls in the place of honor, and the walls and ceilings are covered with particularly hideous green striped wall paper. On the floor is a gorgeous red and green ingrain carpet, which would be dear at 50 cents a yard, and the ordinary glass windows are draped with bargain sale lace curtains.

His majesty, Li Shi, is accustomed to go to bed at 4 o'clock in the morning, at which hour the remainder of the inhabitants of the city get up, for the good reason that at that hour the imperial brass band, braying its loudest, starts on a march round and round the royal palace, being followed by the greater portion of the army. This daily parade is kept up from 4 to 5 o'clock, and when it stops people are too thoroughly wakened to think of going to sleep again.

Prince Yee's mother is the Lady Om, that consort of the emperor about whom a most remarkable lot of false stories have been circulated. It has been stated again and again that the Lady Om was Miss Emily Brown, born the daughter of an American clergyman at Appleton, Wis., some 43 years ago, and who was taken to the far east by her father when he went to Seoul as a missionary more than 25 years ago. This story, however, is emphatically denied by those who should best know.

However that may be it is a fact that Prince Yee is greatly in love with America, and more especially with American girls. From his 13th to his 15th year he lived in Japan, where he studied military tactics and got his first taste of western civilization. Then he was sent to America, where for a year he lived at the Korean legation at Washington, and there studied both the language and the customs of America. For a little while he attended school at Roanoke, Va., and it was while there that he first broke into the newspapers. It appears that his royal father, wishing his son to be accustomed to a frugal and hard life, gave him an allowance of only $300 a month—a sum by no means sufficient to keep the young prince in spending money. Accordingly, on his frequent visits of pleasure to New York he was accustomed to borrow money from the banking firm of Wolfe Bros. & Co. Finally the amounts he had borrowed reached the considerable sum of $30,000. When Prince Yee was summoned into court to pay the loan he replied with an answer which would have done credit to the most talented of American college students.

"Go and see papa," said Prince Yee.

Later he went back home for a short visit and it is perfectly safe to say that the young man's college clothes and silk hats created a considerable sensation among the ladies of the court.

Coming back to the United States, Prince Yee entered the Wesleyan university at Delaware, Ohio, taking a special course in English. He was accompanied by an older native of Korea, who also matriculated as a student, and who bore the title of secretary to his highness.

Prince Yee had not been at Delaware long before he evinced a remarkable fondness for the society of the pretty coeds of the academy. The fact that he is in praising the beauty of American girls in general, and, in particular, he waxed eloquent in praise of Miss Graham, a pretty daughter of West Virginia, who was a fellow student. Those who have seen the women of Korea say it is no wonder Prince Yee thinks American girls are beautiful. And those who have seen Miss Graham declare that she is quite worthy to shine in the special favor of a royal prince.

But presently there came to Delaware a pretty and dashing young milliner from Cincinnati named Clara Bull. Miss Bull came to Delaware to act as a model at a special exhibition of the latest Paris styles, and it may be taken for granted, therefore, that she is a young woman of great pulchritude. Miss Bull, who was a student at the Ohio Wesleyan university, Delaware, Ohio, Prince Yee of Korea, and the young man fell in love at first sight. An introduction was arranged, and for some months he was extremely devoted to her. He even went so far as to present a diamond ring to Miss Bull, but no engagement was announced, it being explained that if the prince should marry an American woman he would be forced to give up all claim to the Korean throne.

Later other pretty girls appeared on the scene and dimmed the memory of Miss Bull in his mind, until it came about that young Prince Yee won the reputation of being an exceedingly fickle young man.

His chance of ascending the ancestral throne of his fathers—the family has been at the head of the Korean government for 500 years—are thought to be exceedingly good. The crown prince, his elder brother, who now stands between him and the throne, is said to be in delicate health, and, besides, is not bright mentally. It is also said that the Lady Om, mother of Prince Yee, and the present reigning favorite with the emperor, is exceedingly anxious to see her own son on the throne. In the meantime, Prince Yee bears the official title of commander of the Korean army. It is against the Korean law for the crown prince to expose himself in battle, the royal family being confined to the ranks of warriors by its second son, for that reason Prince Yee has always been a close student of military tactics, both in this country and Japan.

Personally, Prince Yee has declared that he hopes he may never be called upon to ascend the throne. He much prefers the free and unconfined life of an American college student.

"Our kings," he says, "are kept in the strictest seclusion and are guarded with the greatest care. All day long is spent in a round of tiresome and elaborate court ceremonies. Then in the evening his majesty shuts himself up with the court counselors and matters of importance in the government are considered and decided until long after midnight. It is a hard and unattractive life."

On the subject of marriage and of the attractiveness of American girls he has decided wisely.

"In my country," he says, "a man never even sees the face of his intended bride until after the marriage ceremony has been performed. The match is arranged by his parents and those of the young woman. The contracting parties do not even meet until the wedding day. After they are married the husband may lift the veil and look at the face of his bride. Perhaps he may find her beautiful. Perhaps—and a marriage is a marriage in Korea. We have no divorce laws in my country. The natural result is that there is a great deal of unhappiness in married life."

"I like American girls exceedingly. They are not afraid to come out into the sunlight and be seen. In my country the women are kept secluded, and, strange as it may seem, they make all their calls at night, after the darkness has fallen and they are safe from observation."

Prince Yee declares that his country owes all the progress it has made in the way of western civilization to the enterprise of Americans. He would like to see Korea come completely under American influence, not only commercially but in other ways.

"My ancestors," he says, "drove Buddhism almost entirely out of Korea. There are still Buddhists in the country, but their temples are up in the hills and mountains and are not allowed in the cities. Confucianism is the prevailing religion of the people, though the court may almost be said to have a religion of its own, of which the worship of the ancestors of the royal family is the leading feature. Four times in every year the emperor leaves his palace, and, surrounded by an imposing retinue, makes a pilgrimage to the graves of his ancestors, where elaborate ceremonies are carried out. In recent years Christianity has made great progress in Korea, and I should be glad to see it generally adopted."

It is plain to be seen that in case Prince Yee should come to the troubled throne of his fathers the United States would have a friend at court in the highest sense of the term.

PAVING PROTEST IS SUFFICIENTLY SIGNED

A careful count of the property represented legally on the protest against the Twenty-third street asphalt paving has determined the fact that the improvement is killed. Some 30,000 square feet represented on the remonstrance was declared illegally there, but there still remained enough to defeat the paving and this means that the measure must rest for six weeks until another petition is brought in.

The failure of the Twenty-third street paving to pass is a surprise to the city authorities, who had hoped to see the street put into a good condition to accommodate the traffic that must pass that way to reach the grounds of the forthcoming Lewis and Clark fair.

KNIGHTS ORGANIZE AT BAKER CITY

A delegation from Portland council of Knights of Columbus will visit Baker City next Sunday, for the purpose of organizing there a new council of the order. Delegations will also be present from Spokane, Walla Walla, Seattle and Tacoma. The visiting knights will remain over Monday, Washington's birthday, and will be entertained by the members of the new council.

The delegation from the Portland council will consist of R. L. Norden, state deputy organizer; John M. Gearin, J. B. Kavanagh, Roger Shinnott, Dr. H. L. O'Connor, John N. Casey, J. B. Ryan and J. M. Jones.

WEDDING WILL NOT BE HELD IN CHURCH

The marriage of Miss Evelyn Steel to Harry M. Waltheu, which was to have taken place in the First Congregational church at 8:30 o'clock this evening, has been transferred to the Guilleville, 63 North Eighteenth street. The change was made because of the illness of Miss Steel's mother, Mrs. James Steel. Only the immediate family of the bride couple will attend.

TO MAKE RAILWAY COACHES SAFER

(Journal Special Service.)
Washington, Feb. 16.—Under the supervision of the interstate commission a bill is being prepared which, if it becomes a law, will compel railroad companies to build stronger coaches and other passenger cars, with the exception of sleepers. The bill will be introduced by Representative E. A. Tamm, of Wisconsin, and will provide that all coaches and cars for passenger service shall be constructed with steel sleepers and steel sills.

The American Railway association has been asked to submit details which would be practical from a railroad standpoint, and every care is taken to have the measure such as will effect greater safety in construction. Before beginning the draft of the bill Representative Tamm made a long investigation, going thoroughly into the history of car construction. He conferred also with government officials, who expressed the opinion that something should be done to prevent the further construction of light railway coaches which either telescope or break like egg shells in the event of a wreck, thereby causing a large death and casualty rate.

It is asserted that the immunity from death and injury which passengers in sleeping cars enjoy is due largely to steel underframe construction, and it is understood that the construction of the present-day sleeping car will be taken as a standard. In this event all day coaches, smoking cars, buffet cars, chair and parlor cars will have to be built with extension steel beams and possibly be provided with steel platforms and non-telescopic device.

In view of the unusual number of lives sacrificed in railway wrecks the last year the urgent need of some such legislation is appreciated. At the same time the bill will undoubtedly give the railroads a reasonable length of time with which to comply with the provisions of the measure. This time will be sufficient to permit of all old equipment wearing out, but it will also provide that all cars to be constructed after the passage of the measure shall be of the required standard. It is the purpose to place the enforcement of the measure in the hands of the interstate commission, as is the case with the enforcement of the automatic coupler and other measures requiring the use of safety devices.

A Fine Distinction.

Eleven highwaymen have been sentenced to the penitentiary, and they may all get there. It is safer, though more dishonest, to be a hoodlum than a highwayman.
