Never before have the qualities and prices been more to the customer's advantage in these lines. In the first instance, an exceptionally high standard has been maintained in the styles as well as in the materials and workmanship; secondly, concessions which we enjoy through the extent of our purchases and our purpose to excel always in point of values, bring our prices to the lowest possible point.

Trimmed Hats . $2.00 to $20.00
Trimmed Hats to order by an experienced trimmer from New York, who cannot be excelled.

New Tailored Gowns for Spring at Popular Prices

At a popular price, the Tailored Gown is probably in greater demand than any other costume at the present time. This is largely because the ready-to-wear gowns as now produced have an individual distinction they once lacked. Few gowns are duplicated. Nearly every one is unique and personal, as it were. The prevailing modes are carefully observed, with endless variations. So that a tailored gown this season is as much unduplicated as a gown made by a dressmaker.

Our gowns selling from $10 to $50 were selected with the greatest care and with this demand in view. The consequence is that at these prices nothing equaling these suits for value have ever been shown on the coast. Tomorrow there will be a complete showing of them.

Skirts from $1.50 to $25.00
Fancy and Plain Silk Waists $1.50 to $12.00

It will afford us great pleasure to have you visit with us tomorrow—with no reference to buying—just to look, examine quality and get our prices. While out shopping tomorrow don't forget us.

URNS BATTERIES ON THE RAILWAYS

MILES C. MOORE, FORMER GOV. SENATOR OF WASHINGTON, MAKES CLEAR HIS UNUSUAL POSITION—PREDICTS McBRIDE'S NOMINATION.

His cheeks ruddy as a schoolboy's in winter, and feeling like a year-old thoroughbred, Miles C. Moore, ex-governor of the state of Washington, whose home is in Walla Walla, returned yesterday from a month's trip to southern California. Mr. Moore is well known in Portland, as Walla Walla is more closely allied to the city business than to any town in Washington. He is president of the Baker-Boyer bank of Walla Walla.

Governor Moore, however, is best known in political circles, here and in Washington, as the grand mogul of the great "Boxer" movement in Walla Walla county, which is as a thorn in the side of Senator Levi Arkeny. Moreover, the governor is a statesman and a maker of politicians, both high and low. In view of the fact that the campaign in Washington is between the McBride railroad company and the Walla Walla banker, while a railroad stockholder is a close friend and follower of Washington's strenuously anti-railroad governor, his views on the fight in that state are interesting.

"I went to California to get rid of the grip and shake politics," said Governor Moore. "You see, my friends in Walla Walla, Columbia and Garfield counties are lined up very strongly with Governor McBride and the anti-railroad crowd. Now, I hold some railroad investments, and am not an enemy of the railroads. This puts me in rather an embarrassing position, understand?"

"You see, my friends who have organized the McBride-Roosevelt club in Walla Walla have been with me in many a fierce battle, and I will of necessity be compelled to fight with them in this fight. Governor McBride is the only logical candidate for governor and he will get the delegates from all the grain counties. He will be nominated for governor, too."

"The situation is very badly mixed. If the railroads would put a quietus on the pernicious and meddling activities of their political representatives in Washington, there would be an end of the anti-lobby crusade. The railroads are hampered, too, by the fact that Mr. Hill, of the Great Northern, gave the Minnesota mill the best of it in the Oriental markets. He figured that by bringing Minnesota flour to the coast he could carry lumber products in increasing quantities from the coast to the east in return cars. This policy is now ineffectual because of $1 wheat. But Mr. Hill couldn't have foreseen that. Every bushel of Minnesota wheat shipped to the Orient as flour means a loss to the Washington and Oregon farmers."

"We are looking for a Moses in Washington politics. People are tired of mediocrity in the senate and elsewhere. Who will succeed Senator Postey? I don't believe the man has been named yet."

Mr. Moore stayed at the Arlington club and left last night for his home. Here he met President Mohler of the O. R. & N. company, with whom he is associated in some business enterprises. They discussed various railroad matters. Mr. Moore said that his railroad friends, while remonstrating with him on his alliance with Governor McBride, have respect for his obligations to his anti-railroad following in Walla Walla, known throughout Washington as the "Boxer" element in that state.

WILL CELEBRATE GLORIOUS FOURTH

MARDI GRAS MANAGERS PLAN TO MAKE NATION'S BIRTHDAY GRAND EVENT OF COMING CARNIVAL—UNIONS THROUGHOUT THE STATE INVITED TO ATTEND.

Preparations for a Fourth of July celebration at Portland have already been started. The members of the committee having in charge the Union Labor's Mardi Gras which will be given in this city from June 23 to July 12 have decided to make the Fourth the leading day of the entertainment.

At a meeting which was held last night plans for getting the event properly before the public were discussed at some length. The secretary was instructed to correspond with the various unions throughout the state, and request them to give their assistance in making the affair a success. The Mardi Gras will also be boomed at the state labor convention which will be held at Oregon City during the week beginning May 2. Pictorial posters have already been printed, and will be given wide circulation immediately.

"It is our intention," said Arthur Brock, chairman of the committee having the work in hand, "to make the Fourth of July the big day of the carnival, and there is no doubt that what ever held in this city. In our invitations that we are sending out to the unions in various parts of the state, particular attention is called to what we expect to do on the nation's birthday, and there is no doubt that many will be here then who cannot see their way clear to attend at any other time. In the morning we will have a parade, one of the largest ever seen in Portland, and at night an illuminated procession, 15,000 strong, will march through the streets."

With the proceeds derived from the show, which is to be given under the auspices of the Federated Trades Council, it is the intention to build a labor temple. The committee appointed to get the matter under way is composed of Arthur Brock, Grant McDonald, L. D. Reed, M. E. Gill and Harry Gurr. This committee will be added to from time to time.

MEMORIAL FUND FOR STATUE OF STRAUSS

I. N. FLEISCHNER.

I. N. Fleischer of this city, well-known as a patron of art and music, has been appointed by Princess Crox Sternberg of Vienna a committee of one for the Pacific coast, in charge of the memorial fund for the waltz king, the late Johann Strauss. This movement was started in Vienna, the home of Strauss, and is an international character, and people of all countries will be invited to contribute to the fund, with which it is planned to erect a beautiful memorial statue in Vienna. Princess Crox Sternberg is the president and an enthusiastic member of the committee in Vienna.

Mr. Fleischer has already received several substantial subscriptions for the fund from friends who remember the pulsing measures of the "Wine, Women and Song" waltz, or the even better known "Beautiful Blue Danube." Johann Strauss was born at Vienna, October 25, 1825, and died in that city June 3, 1899. He was a composer and conductor, but attained his greatest fame through his dance music, of which he composed nearly 400 pieces.

JOINED TWO HEARTS HALF CENTURY AGO

It was a warm day in early spring when the steamer Governor Ramsay tied up at the wharf and Capt. John Rowlinn leaped ashore. The Governor Ramsay, named in honor of the first territorial governor of Minnesota, piled on the upper Mississippi, past the place where now are situated the two great twin cities of the middle west, St. Paul and Minneapolis.

In the captain's cabin Egbert met Reuben M. Richards, sheriff of Benton, one of the three counties of the territory of Minnesota, and Miss Lois V. Munson, the bride-to-be. The young justice was personally acquainted with both, and after many stammers and blushes from both parties he performed his first wedding ceremony. Captain Rowlinn stood by and gave the bride away and the crew of the Governor Ramsay witnessed the event. Then with the remark "no charges, the pleasure of uniting two such good people is worth the fee, and I wish you well," George Egbert returned to shore and again took up his work. The first wedding in the territory of Minnesota had been solemnized. "That was in 1850," mused Capt. George Egbert, veteran bailiff of the United States district court, "and I'm 84 years of age now, but the occasion of my first wedding ceremony is as green in my memory as if it were yesterday. Since then I have officiated at many weddings, but none that I've ever performed, or heard of since, have been as unique."

The skipper made his way to the store, one of the few buildings that stood in the clearing by the river bank and inquired for a minister. "There's none hereabouts," replied the storekeeper, and then after a moment's thought, added, "But there's George Egbert over there. He's the justice of the peace."

"He'll do," exclaimed the captain and he hastened to the place where the red shirted justice was building a cabin.

"Sure," was the ready response of the young carpenter-justice when he learned that the steambot man desired. "I have been justice long and I've never married anyone yet, but I guess I can try." So saying, he walked to the boat with Captain Rowlinn, wiping the moisture from his face and neck as he strode along.

Captain Egbert is well known in Portland, where he has resided for the past 17 years. He has been an officer of the federal court for several years, and in spite of his age is a very active man and takes great delight in "spinning yarns with the boys."

The captain went to Minnesota shortly after it was organized as a territory and the wedding ceremony related occurred at a time when most of the country was a wilderness and there was but three organized counties, Ramsay, Jefferson and Benton.

SHERLOCK SOLOMON A WILY SLEUTH

The study of Sherlock Holmes as an abstraction created by Dr. A. Conan Doyle out of numerous interesting personalities may be dropped. No longer need the comparison be made with Gaboriau or on Poe's "purloined letter," or "The Murders in the Rue Morgue." Sherlock has materialized in the flesh. He "has come." Right here in Portland has taken up his residence and begun to electrify the multitude with his brilliant system of inductive and deductive reasoning combined. In its present terrestrial manifestation of the Sherlock detective instinct, the spirit of "his aim and motive" is clear. Now that he has revealed his true identity, he will be known as Sherlock Solomon.

ing right back where we started from. Then I gave him the glassy orb and left him.

"Didn't I tell you?" exclaimed Sherlock delightedly. "I might have forgotten when the directory was printed and suffered a lapse of memory as regards a Chestnut street being on the east side. How? Well, I noticed his hands, and they looked as if they hadn't been washed for three weeks. No boy living with his mother would be permitted to go around so dirty as that."

As is well known, Nate figures as one of the proprietors of the Portland Club. Yesterday afternoon, while he was reviewing a floor walker, a young man approached him and motioned to buy groceries. He had just lost $4.50, money which had been given him by his mother to purchase groceries. While telling his little tale of woe his lachrymal glands began working overtime.

A Ten Cent Ball.

Nate questioned him and learned that he came from Minnesota three weeks ago and lived with his mother on the east side.

"What street do you live on?" queried the Club man.

"Chestnut street," was the answer.

"What's the number?"

"I can't remember. We've only been there a short time."

Nathan took a directory and looked for the name. He could not find it. The boy gently reminded him that the directory was printed more than three weeks ago.

"So it was, so it was," admitted the gaming man, "but I think you are lying just the same."

Calling one of the employees into a side room, Nate told him to go home with the lad and if his story were found true, that he had gambled away money given him by his mother to buy groceries, to return the money. In about 30 minutes the employe came back alone, puffing as if from unusual exertion.

"What luck?" asked Nate.

"Luck? Didn't you know there is no Chestnut street on the other side of the river? That boy forgot what car he took, forgot what bridge he walked over, forgot everything but that he went home across a gulch or something, but he didn't forget to walk me nearly to death, until I discovered he was com-

THIS SEA GULL A WISE OLD BIRD

Sea gulls are not usually accredited with being very wise birds, but some of those which have taken up their abode along Portland's water front know a great deal more, so river men say, than many people imagine. Perhaps those frequenting inland waters and hovering constantly in the vicinity of a large city, explain the local naturalists, have picked up much knowledge that is denied their kinsmen, which are particular not to stray too far from the sounding sea.

Be this as it may, there is an old gray sea gull making his home between the Madison and steel bridges that is enjoying life to the fullest extent. Sunshine or rain it is all the same to him. He leads the same merry existence every day, picking up a few crumbs here and a delicacy now and then everywhere.

Boat riding seems to be one of his great delights. Every morning as regular as clockwork, he appears at the Taylor street dock at about the time the steamer Lurline is preparing to depart on her regular run to Astoria. He perches himself upon the knob of the flagstaff and impatiently waits for the whistle to blow. There he sits undisturbed, placidly viewing the surrounding scenery until the steel bridge is reached. When the boat is passing through the draw he spreads his wide wings and leisurely flies up stream. The remainder of the day is spent darning up and down stream with his winged companions and occasionally grabbing up a few morsels of food that have been thrown into the water by the beach-combers.

But he never forgets to take the ride down to the steel bridge. The officers and crew of the Lurline have become so accustomed to his visits that they would think something was radically wrong if the bird should fail to put in an appearance at the regular hour. They have become attached to him, and say that he will be greatly missed if he decides to spend the summer at the seashore. But if he wants to go they state they will give him free transportation.

TO REPAIR MANKANTA.

Lighthouse Tender Will Be Thoroughly Overhauled.

Joseph Paquet has started the work of making repairs to the lighthouse tender Mankanta. He has the vessel dismasted, and is now employed in making masts and spars to take the place of the old ones. The timbers being used are Oregon fir. The vessel is also to be recockled and will undergo other repairs to her hull and machinery. It is expected that the work will be completed in about a month.

Captain Calkins, local lighthouse inspector, says there is plenty of work mapped out for the fleet this season. They will be kept busy supplying the lighthouses, stations and buoys along the coast. A short time ago the Mankanta returned from a northern cruise.

Every family should have a household medicine chest, and the first bottle in it should be Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, nature's remedy for coughs and colds.
