

BEAUTY DOCTOR CASE HAS A HOT FINISH

Women Witnesses Come to Blows and Arrests Follow--Testimony Is Spicy and Contradicting--Shrunken Faces Backed with Cotton.

MRS. S. W. DUKE

A sensational encounter with umbrellas and bare feet took place between Mrs. S. W. Duke and Mrs. E. Dunn in front of the Alsworth building last night at the conclusion of the celebrated "beauty case," wherein Mrs. Duke charged Madame Gertrude Saxe, a local "beauty doctor," with damaging her face to the extent of $200. The two women became very bitter toward each other during the progress of the trial, and decided to settle their grievances in the manner stated. They whipped each other over the head with their umbrellas, and struck a few blows with their fists, when bystanders separated them.

As a result of the fight Mrs. Dunn was arrested last night by the police on a charge of assault and battery. Her case came up in the municipal court this morning and was set for hearing next Thursday.

The trial of the civil action was heard before Justice of the Peace William Reid, and at its conclusion he announced that he would take the matter under advisement. Judge Henry McGinn and V. K. Stroud represented Madame Saxe, and Wilson T. Hume the plaintiff.

The first witness was the plaintiff herself, tall, slender woman, whose face was the cause of the whole trouble, or, rather, the alleged refusal of Madame Saxe to properly treat one half of it was the cause.

Mrs. Duke told how she went to Madame Saxe to have her face treated, and how early in August last, she became engaged to the "beauty doctor" to perform the duties of a demonstrator in her parlors in the Alsworth building. "I had no money," said Mrs. Duke. "but I wanted to have my face treated, so it was arranged that I should act as demonstrator in Madame Saxe's parlors for the period of three months. I was to have my face treated free of cost for my services, and it was to be done in the three months."

Cross-examination by Attorney Stroud brought out the fact that witness was in the blue-grass regions of old Kentucky.

The first witness for the defense was H. S. Harcourt, who testified Mrs. Duke had told him that she was greatly pleased with the work of the "beauty doctor."

Mrs. Dr. Manion was called to show that Madame Saxe was really ill—too ill to work—in December, and that it was on her order that she refused to continue the treatment of patients.

The ages of none of the witnesses were taken by the court. There was a stir when Mrs. E. C. Brown was called.

"You work for Mrs. Saxe?" was asked.

"I do," came the quick reply.

"What do you know of her skill and ability?"

"Well," said the witness, as she faced the court, "Mrs. Saxe treated my face, and she did excellent work."

At this reply there was a burst of laughter that even the court joined in, and which lasted fully two minutes.

"You are the woman whose picture runs in The Journal, aren't you?" asked Attorney Hume, on cross-examination.

"Yes, I believe my picture was in the paper," was the reply.

"Isn't it a fact that Mrs. Saxe pays you for the privilege of running your picture as an advertisement?" asked Hume.

"Yes, she paid me, of course," was the answer.

Mrs. Saxe was called in her own behalf. She denied in general the allegations of Mrs. Duke, saying that when the agreement was entered into Mrs. Duke was to work for her six months and was to have her face treated for remuneration, but that instead of carrying out her agreement Mrs. Duke wanted to go to Los Angeles, so she told her she might go, but that she would have to pay $150, the full price for the treatment of her face, as she had broken her contract.

"I never refused to treat the lady's face," said Mrs. Saxe. "I was ill for a long time, and was unable to continue the work. I set one date after my illness for her to come, and when she came she had all of her teeth out and was in no condition to take the treatment. I advised her to come again. When she came she had a dreadful cough."

"What Mrs. Duke says about me making her put cotton in her mouth is a falsehood."

The last witness for the defense was Mrs. E. Dunn, a neighbor of Mrs. Duke. "That woman is the worst old scrub in the entire neighborhood," said Mrs. Dunn, referring to Mrs. Duke. "She is a trouble-breeder and no one will speak to her there."

Mrs. Duke advised me to have my face "fixed," but I told her that my young days were past; that I had had all the fun I wanted, and that my face was all right, anyway. Mrs. Duke replied: "Well, you know old roses are always thrown away, but young ones are always kept. Have your face treated, and maybe you can catch a fine young feller."

This ended the case, the attorneys agreed to waive argument, and the matter was taken under advisement.

"You told the newspaper reporters that I was an old drunk," shouted Mrs. Dunn, when she saw Mrs. Duke. "You're the lowest down woman in this city, and no one of your neighbors will speak to you."

"Well, you are drunk all the time," replied Mrs. Duke.

Whack, bang, over Mrs. Duke's head there fell the crash of an umbrella. Then another, and another blow was struck. Bystanders separated them.

Interest hinges on the men who are within the steel tube as, notwithstanding the first report that all must have met nearly instant death from gasoline fumes, naval officers have hope. It is said that the boat was supplied with apparatus which would furnish the imprisoned men with a sufficient quantity of air to sustain life for three days.

Unless the boat was completely overturned by the liner, causing the overflowing of her gasoline tanks, and consequent asphyxiation of the crew by fumes, there seems reasonable hope that all may survive.

SULLIVAN GULCH BRIDGE WRECKED

morning, "when suddenly I heard timbers snapping and saw the men run for their lives. In an instant the barn collapsed with a crash that could be heard for blocks. Live wires fell into the street and I beat a hasty retreat for my store. It was some time before the wires were straightened out and we could get a look at the damaged barn. There was a man on the roof of the barn at the time it fell. He seemed to be getting ready to cut the wires, and how he escaped is more than I can tell. We all thought he was killed when the barn fell."

By means of a pile driver the Tanner creek sewer was opened about 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A few minutes later the dirt caved in and closed the opening. The water swept away the piling and flowed back into the valley below. The dirt continued to cave in until the mouth of the sewer was more completely choked than before. The water began to flow over Multnomah field again and to slowly undermine the exposition building. The recent fill on Nineteenth street between Washington and Alder was swept away and the bridge was closed to traffic. This morning this bridge was deemed so unsafe that the police roped it in and prevented its use by pedestrians. The earth beneath the exposition building has been washed away, and the building may collapse at any moment. Work on Multnomah field the water is up to the grand stand.

Watch Horses All Night. The rooming house at the corner of Nineteenth and Morrison streets is partly undermined and a police officer was detailed last night to watch it and report the least disturbance to the police who remained in the building. This morning the building had settled so far that the alarm bells were rung for the time being. The Heperian lodging house also settled a little and an officer watched it throughout the night. City Engineer Elliott was on the ground at an early hour this morning making an effort to again open the sewer, but up to 10 o'clock had accomplished nothing. The end of the sewer at the opening is now under 10 feet of debris and the engineering force will remain there way through the night. The remains of the fill at Nineteenth and Alder streets is caving in and every hour causes the sewer to choke worse than before. The ground is so unsafe that the men are almost afraid to work. Nothing could be done this morning in the face of the raising water from the heavy rain of last night to drain the water from Multnomah field, and unless this is done by nightfall the exposition building will in all probability be wrecked.

As soon as the sewer can be opened and the greater part of the water drained off the engineering force will reinforce the damaged buildings and make an attempt to save them. It was stated this morning by those living in the neighborhood that the buildings were in a worse condition than they were last night, and only a matter of time when the water would make the danger greater than at the present time. A squad of police guarded the neighborhood. At an early hour men began to tear away the barn wreckage and to reinforce the bridges at Nineteenth and Alder streets.

Try to Open Sewer Again. Another effort was made this afternoon to open the sewer by means of the pile driver and hydraulics, and if it is not accomplished by nightfall it is possible the city will keep the sewer closed. The city will keep men on the ground throughout the night.

According to officers of the Portland street railway company the loss resulting from the cave-in of the Washington street bridge will amount to thousands of dollars. The damage to each of the cars may reach $500. The lowest figure placed by the company's officials on the wreck's cost is $5,000, and this is based on the hope that the cars have not been greatly injured by their tumble. Should the 12 cars prove to have been badly wrecked the loss may reach $10,000.

Mrs. W. H. Bennett of 849 Morrison street was an eye witness to the precipitous fall of the barn into the gulch at Nineteenth and Washington streets last evening. She said: "About 4:45 last evening while I was preparing dinner, I heard a terrific crash at the back of our house. On rushing to the window I saw the barn falling into the gulch. I saw the timbers falling, and I saw the barn falling. Well's house, which has been a landmark for years, sliding down into the gulch. There was a large maple and a group of tall cedars, which were torn from the earth like so many straws, and hurled into the gulch. The water on the street side. All along the gulch the earth kept constantly sliding and caving in until in a few moments a large part of the Alder street bridge near Seventeenth was undermined, and broke loose. A crash into the gulch about 25 feet below."

"In quick succession came other great crashes and the car barns facing on Washington street and bordering on the gulch, went down, carrying 11 cars. The wreck of the cars in the barn had been warned of the approaching danger when the timbers went down, and had succeeded in getting two cars out of the building. They were gone too soon, as the creaking timbers of the barn gave warning and the greater part soon came down the bank of the street.

"City Engineer Elliott soon arrived on the scene with his deputies, and took charge of the work. On our side of the gulch, we had not thought of danger, and Mr. Bennett and I were just ready to eat our dinner when we were warned by a city employee to leave at once, as there was imminent danger from the house on the corner, occupied by Mrs. Vance as a rooming house, and owned by O'Shea brothers, which was leaning over the street."

"We had not realized, while we were in the house what a commotion was going on outside. Crowds quickly gathered and there was much excitement. All the people in Mrs. Vance's house were moving out and there was much alarm among the women and children. Our buildings did not seem in imminent danger of falling, although it is supported at the back only by two brick columns, which have rested in the water ever since the break in the Tanner creek sewer. The residents of our building, including Mrs. McKibben, who has dressmaking parlors, and Mrs. McCauley, were ordered to leave by City Engineer Elliott. At 9 p. m. the cars stopped running over the Tanner street bridge, and passengers had to transfer over to cars on the corner of Washington and Nineteenth streets. Three police officers were patrolling the neighborhood to insure the safety of the property left by the residents."

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bennett have a grocery store at 549 Morrison street.

and fellow-feeling, the people of Multnomah county will be well satisfied with the nominations we shall make. I hope that the small units and put forward a solid front. I hope we shall be united for the good of the Republican party, the good of the ticket and the welfare of the people. I hope all differences have disappeared and that an era of union is now being inaugurated, and that we shall be able to receive nominations for temporary chairman."

C. W. Hodson named A. A. Courtenay, "a sterling Republican," for temporary chairman of the convention. This motion carried, and amid enthusiastic approval Courtenay made his way to the platform, where Judge Carey warmly grasped his hand. As the chairman bowed, the first enthusiasm among the delegates was manifest.

Chairman Courtenay's Speech. Chairman Courtenay said: "Gentlemen, I have recovered from a severe attack of chronic gastritis. Nothing could be retained on my stomach during my illness. Not even milk. I was reduced from 165 lbs. to 125 lbs. in 7 weeks. Nothing did me any good. My son insisted that I should try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which had cured his father. It stayed on my stomach, and I was able to take a little milk with it. It acted like magic, and in a few weeks I was able to take solid food without distress. I soon regained my weight, my stomach was sound, my general health was never better. And I owe my cure to Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey." C. E. Updegraff, 35 S. 4th St., Nov. 19, 1903.

The chairman was empowered to appoint committees on credentials, on permanent organization and order of business, and on resolutions, each committee consisting of five members.

Willis Dunlavy moved the appointment of a committee of five to select delegates to the state and congressional conventions, but an objection from C. W. Hodson that such an appointment would be of no effect until after the report of the committee on credentials was sustained by the chair. A recess of 15 minutes was then taken to allow the chairman to make his appointments on standing committees, and on reconvening these were announced as follows:

Committees Are Named. On permanent organization and order of business, Edward Mendenhall, James Sheringhouse, E. B. Colwell, George MacMillan, W. S. Dunlavy.

On resolutions—W. J. Cameron, L. Saldern, A. R. Joy, S. C. Pier, E. H. Kelly.

On credentials—W. I. Muir, F. E. Beach, George Bamford, W. J. Miller, H. H. Northrup.

The convention immediately adjourned until 1:30 o'clock, and the committee assembled to prepare their reports.

Minority is Represented. On each of the committees the chairman of the majority had appointed representatives of the minority faction, so there was a prospect of interesting meetings during the noon recess. But no conflict developed and that at the meeting of the committee on permanent organization.

Out and Dried Program. Mr. Mendenhall gathered his committee about him on the theatre stage and produced the order of business, ready to be a unique program in many respects, but Mr. Mendenhall admitted he had written it himself.

In the first place the proposed order of business provided for the nomination of a permanent county commissioner and other county officers, and finally delegates to the congressional convention to assemble April 13, and the state convention set for April 14.

In this proposed order of business the order provided for the selection of nominees for state senators and representatives by a committee to be named by the chairman of the convention. If the convention was to endorse the committee's selection it was not specifically so stated.

Simon Men Protest. W. S. Dunlavy of the committee protested vigorously against this third section. "So did fellow committee member, George MacMillan, both at Simon delegates. But the three majority members, Chairman Mendenhall, E. B. Colwell and James Sheringhouse, adopted this section and all other sections without hesitation.

One incident of the heated committee meeting was Chairman Mendenhall's refusal to give a copy of the order of business to the two minority members.

"Do you mean you won't give a copy of the report to us?" demanded Dunlavy. "Exactly," responded Mendenhall. "If you want it go to the chairman."

After an hour's work the committee on credentials, F. E. Beach, chairman, finally concluded its labors without resort to any dissenting of any of the minority delegates.

Dudley Evans appeared before the committee and made some harsh remarks about Judge Carey. He said Carey had tried to unseat him, although he had carried his precinct as in a pocket. Evans had a proxy entitling him to a seat in the convention in place of L. Cederberg, of the twenty-third precinct. He was unseated because Cader Powell came to the convention with a proxy from Cederberg dated only a few days later than the paper Evans produced.

Resolutions Are Read. Early in the afternoon session the committee on resolutions handed in its report as follows:

Resolved, That the Republicans of Multnomah county have watched with pride the progress of Theodore Roosevelt from step to step as he has risen to the exalted position he now occupies with such distinguished credit to himself and with such satisfaction to the people of the United States, and especially his efforts towards securing for us the interoceanic canal and his liberal policy toward the Pacific Coast generally. We cordially endorse him, as we do his administration of public affairs. We desire in favor of his re-nomination by the Republican National convention.

For years I suffered from a bronchial affection. Nothing the doctors gave me seemed to do any good, and it kept getting worse. Finally one of the doctors advised me to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which he had used for years in his practice. My throat commenced to heal at once, my cough grew better and today I am completely cured. A picture of robust, rugged health, cheerfully recommend Duffy's to all my friends."
