It is probable that the hig annual convention of the National Good Roads association will come to Portland in 1905. The Lewis and Clark fair corporation has been informed by Secretary R. W. Richardson of the association that a Portland delegation at the St. Louis convention, which is held this month, will have a good chance to land the convention, as many of the officers of the association favor Portland on account of the 1965 fair and the advertising the work of the association will receive from this axposition. Several infuential local citizens will go to St. Louis to help secure the convention for Portland.

The unique manner in which J. Humphrey of Mount Zion transports his three young children through the city's streets attracted a large crowd yesterday in front of the Chamber of Commerce building. A small handcart is used, and the father pushes the youngsters about through the streets in it. Mrs. Humphrey went up into a law office in the building and left her husband and the children standing on Third street. When she returned she had to elbow her way through a large crowd that had sathered out of curiosity to

The liquor license committee of the council does not appreciate the merits of "Bob" Patterson as a saloonkeeper, and so deeply rooted is its dislike to Mr. Patterson as a vender of mixed and straight beverages that even the corner where he once held forth, at Fourth and Couch streets, is burred to all license applicants. L. Richards yesterday asked the committee to transfer his license from 183 Morrison streat to the blockaded corner, but despite his assertions that "Bob" had nothing whatever to do with the new venture, the committee was skeptical and refused the license.

CHIEF IS GENEROUS WITH UNION CIGARS

The happiest smile that ever covered the features of old Jim Hill stole over them this morning at 8 o'clock. As he stood in a trench at the city jail, tramping the earth with a pat, pat, pat, Chief of Police Hunt stepped up to the old

"Here, Jim, is a cigar for you; smoke it and be happy," said the chief.

Jim took the cigar, which was a good one, with a large, red and gold label, and honestly viewed it with surprise. It touched his heart to think that after It touched his heart to think that after having been in the jail hundreds of times, and having given the police much trouble, the head of the department should give him sufficient thought to present him with a cigar.

"Sure, I'll shmoke it, chief; ye bet I will, and tank'e, too," replied old Jim.

Then Jim turned and began to tamp the earth again.

"Jim, how did you like the cigar the chief gave you?" was asked of the old man after he had smoked the weed. "It was a dandy." Jim replied. "What kind was it, Jim?"

"Sure, boy; I nivver looked to see-jist shmoked ut, and that's all I know; but I tink ut was one of dem union kind."

"What makes you think so, Jim?"
"Well, ye know de chief is a strong union man, und from dat I reckon ut wus union—dat's all."

Then old Jim took up his task of tamping the earth, to help hurry the city jail repairs so that in the future his home—the jail—will be in better condition than in the past.
