

CAST OF THE SACAJAWEA STATUE

As the centennial approaches, of one of the momentous events in the history of the United States—the expedition of Lewis and Clark—sent out by President Jefferson to find an overland route to the Pacific and to take possession of the country drained by the Columbia, in the name of the United States, the newspapers team with every incident connected with it. Journals and books, histories and biographies crowd the market telling of the glorious deeds of the men who took part in its successful accomplishment, but it remained to a little woman, the mother of a charming family, two sons of whom have almost grown to manhood, buried among her books in her lovely home on the heights above the Willamette river in Oregon, to make all the world wake up to a realization that there was a "woman in the case," and to that only woman who accompanied that historic party was its success almost wholly due. Perfect equipment, sturdy men and brave, fine discipline, cool judgment and humane treatment were all valuable possessions of the men who went to make up the party, but would have counted for naught had the way been lost or the party delivered into the hands of the savages instead of being administered to them when they were in dire need. Mrs. Dye in "The Conquest," which, by the way, has become one of the great text books of the country, it having just been adopted by the State Teachers' Reading circle of Illinois, and is also used in the public schools of Iowa, Nebraska, the two Dakotas and Kansas, has brought the fact out strikingly and indisputably that if it had not been for this one woman just that very thing would have happened. She guided them into the right path, and procured for them the good will of the Indian tribes through which they passed.

The city of Portland has contributed half a million dollars, the state of Oregon another half million, congress about the same. Every state in the union and many nations of the world are coming to Portland in 1905 to celebrate the deeds of these men and Sacajawea, the Indian woman, guide, interpreter and friend of the whole party, was never once thought of when all these preparations were begun. Nor would she yet be if the women of the whole northwest had not risen up and are striving to perpetuate her memory by erecting a memorial which through all time shall remain a testimonial to a noble woman, the pioneer mother and the appreciation of the women of today.

In order to do this an association has been formed with its headquarters in Portland and whose president is Mrs. Eva Emery Dye, author of "The Conquest." Among its officers is Mrs. C. M. Cartwright, who for many years has been in charge of the annual banquet tendered the pioneers; Mrs. Kate E. Bingham, daughter of the first governor of Washington; Mrs. Farmer, a granddaughter of George Shannon, one of the Lewis and Clark party; Mrs. Mary Phelps Montgomery, one of the board of lady managers of the St. Louis exposition, and a number of others identified with Oregon history. Membership in the association is but 50 cents. It has been put at this small sum that the work may become national, and enable a large number to contribute, though this does not prevent larger contributions. Memberships have been sent from every state in the union. Many of the towns of Oregon and Idaho have contributed as a body.

Prominent women in different sections of the country are interesting themselves in it, notably among them being Mrs. Donald MacLean, regent of the New York D. A. S.; Mrs. Wilkes, wife of the supreme judge of Tennessee, and many others.

The whole cost of the statue is to be $7,000. Miss Alice Cooper, a daughter of the west and former pupil of Lorado Taft, is the artist.

The design has not yet been determined upon, but with a few changes the accompanying pictures will be very near what the statue will be.

These pictures are, however, only photographs of the first small clay models and give a very inadequate idea of what the finished work will be.

The difficulty in raising money when so many demands are being made has seriously interfered with the progress of the work, and even yet its completion in time for the Lewis and Clark fair is problematical, and will require hard and earnest work on the part of the women if it is to be accomplished.

Ten reasons why the women of the northwest should erect a statue to Sacajawea:

1. Sacajawea was the only woman to accompany the Lewis and Clark expedition.
2. She was their guide and interpreter.
3. She protected them when threatened by hostile Indians.
4. She procured for them food and horses when destitute of both.
5. She saved their journals and valuable papers at the risk of her own life.
6. She was the only one of the party who received no pecuniary compensation for her services.
7. While enduring hardships and suffering she administered to the necessities of others.
8. She welcomed with intelligent appreciation the civilization of the white race.
9. Over $1,000,000 will be spent in honoring the memory of the heroes of the Lewis and Clark party and not a cent of it has been appropriated to the only heroine.
10. She was the first pioneer mother to cross the Rocky mountains and carry her baby into the Oregon country.

Mrs. Eva Emery Dye, our Oregon authoress, lives in a beautiful house in Oregon City. Her best known works—books which have helped pave the way for our Lewis and Clark fair—are "McLoughlin and Old Oregon," and "The Conquest."

Mrs. Dye is a graduate of Oberlin and was well known in her college days as the "Poet Laureate of the College," and after her graduation, she was married to her classmate, Charles Henry Dye of Fort Madison, Iowa, who will also be remembered as one of the prize winners at the oratorical contest. Mrs. Dye has devoted her leisure to the study of western history, particularly to the local and romantic features that escape the old school historians. Some of her earlier poems show that her genius is not entirely of the prose order.
