

WASHINGTON MAY GO DEMOCRATIC

TACOMA TICKET CAN BE DEFEATED IF RIGHT MAN IS PUT UP BY OP-POSITION—FILER'S CANDIDACY SHOWS WEAKENING WITHIN McBRIDE'S RANKS.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Seattle, May 13.—If the Democrats of Washington put up the right kind of a ticket the one nominated by the Republicans in Tacoma this week will be beaten. The Republican ticket has so many elements of weakness that with a man like Senator George Turner of Spokane leading a list of candidates opposed to that headed by McMead of Whatcom, the state would undoubtedly go Democratic, at least as far as state officers are concerned. In the last week the United States senate has advanced outwardly, but its weakness has advanced.

The Republican ticket is weak partly because of the candidates of which it is made up, but more so because of the influences which brought about its making and the manner in which it was formed. King led the combination that carried the convention, and eastern Washington got hardly enough places on the ticket to make it worth while holding a convention. Governor McMead and his followers, however, were given absolutely no consideration in any way. McBride's name did not go before the convention, even, and he almost remained in hiding. Perhaps no other convention in the history of the state has been handled in such a high-handed way.

As a result, even though McBride says he will stand by his party and the ticket, the possibility is discussed of forming an independent ticket headed by King for governor and given the impetus of Turner's candidacy for the United States senate. Such a combination would get the regular Democratic vote and the tremendous percentage of independent voters who are disgusted that their wishes should be given so little consideration by the party in power in Washington politics.

Turner, it is declared, might consent to run for governor with McBride as lieutenant governor, for they are the best of friends, with the quiet understanding that with a Democratic legislature the governor would be made senator and McBride again would be in his present position as chief of the state on his fight against the railroad lobby and for a railroad commission.

In view of his announcement the weakness of this plan lies in getting McBride to run on anything but an out-and-out Republican platform, for he is essentially a party man in spite of his railroad hobbies. But he admits that he has not given up hope of carrying his principles into execution, nor has he given up his fight. He acknowledges his complete defeat in the convention, and bows to what is supposed to represent the will of the people, but he says his time will come.

The nomination of an almost unknown man for governor is one of the greatest weaknesses of the ticket now before the people. It was framed by barter and trade solely and only, except where the railroad dictatorship interfered. John D. Farrell, assistant to President Hill of the Great Northern, said with authority that he should not be selected, and his orders were not transgressed. His representatives at the Tacoma gathering kept him informed of just what was going on, but no final decision on any matter of importance was made without his sanction.

Though Mead has not a record of opposition to railroads, his nomination is perfectly satisfactory to the roads, and it is generally understood that his election would be a great victory for the heavy corporate interests. So it is with the other important offices on the ticket. J. C. Lora of Olympia, though he had a pretty strong southwest combination, never really expected to be governor, but he made a play for the head of the ticket that he could demand the naming of the state treasurer, as he desires the money of the state kept in his Olympia bank. He expected George Mills.

The east side of the Columbia river, or really only one good one, for the Columbia river is considered the dividing line between eastern and central Washington, and Yakima was given almost all the offices that got across the Cascades. The commission plank in the platform was turned down without a tremor, no the eastern part of the state didn't have much to be thankful for. Piles' selection of the legislature to the convention did him little good in King county as his manipulations were tyrannical. Many delegates were secured in his interest at the convention, but Piles himself is weakening. It is even said that he has almost ready to cry quits, no trying has been made, and it is not much more than begun. He is not physically able to stand the strain, and his managers are forced to do all the work while he tries to get away from men and politics and to his all this is in Wilson's interest, as he is the legatee of Piles' strength whenever it shall seem that Piles cannot be elected.

AMUSEMENTS.
