CALIFORNIA AND OREGON HOP CROPS

CALIFORNIA YIELD HAS BEEN OVER-ESTIMATED—INTEREST IN LOCAL OPTION—CANAL COMPANY TO IRRIGATE KLAMATH—INJURED IN RUNAWAY.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Salem, Or., June 3.—Henry J. Ottenheimer, local representative of Lienthal Bros., has returned from an extended visit with Mrs. Ottenheimer's parents in San Francisco, and will remain in the city for about a week attending numerous business matters which require his attention, in connection with the business of Lienthal Bros., and also his hop yards.
Mr. Ottenheimer says that the reports of a large crop of hops in California has been greatly over-estimated, owing to adverse conditions, and the yield is now expected to be about the same as last year. While returning to Oregon, he found a scene of devastation in the Sacramento valley, so far as the hop crop is concerned. In the Riverside country the Sacramento side of the levee has given way and all of the yards in that vicinity are under water. An acreage which would ordinarily yield 4,000 bales, will amount to nothing. On the Eola side the yield will be light, owing to late high water in the Sacramento river.
Speaking of the prospects in California...

PIONEER OF 1845 IS LAID TO REST

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Hillsboro, Or., June 3.—Isaac Butler, a highly respected pioneer of 1845, died at his home here Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. He was born June 12, 1830, in Alabama, from which place his parents moved to Illinois and thence to Missouri. At an early period in life he was wedded to Tabitha J. Tucker and with his bride immediately started across the plains by means of an ox team. In the fall of 1845 they arrived in Washington county, where they made a permanent residence. In 1847 Mr. Butler enlisted in the Cayuse war in which he fought with credit.
In 1849 his wife died, and in 1872 he married Mrs. Polly C. Moore. He was father of the following children: George W. Butler, Hillsboro; John Thomas Butler, Yakima; Sarah Jane Hoopengartner, Portland; Mary E. Benjamin, Chino, Cal.; Anna E. Sigler, Hillsboro; Charles A. Butler, deceased; Elyada W. Boyd, Phillips; William H. Butler, Grants Pass; Benjamin F. Butler, Chino, Cal.; Lucy E. Sigler, Phillips; Harry M. Butler, Hillsboro; Isaac M. Butler, Hillsboro; Frederic R. Butler, deceased; James E. Butler, St. Louis, Mo.; and Lottie H. Butler, Hillsboro.
The funeral services, conducted by Rev. James A. Campbell, were held in the Christian church here at 2 o'clock this afternoon, interment taking place in the Masonic cemetery near Hillsboro.

ISAAC BUTLER.

This afternoon, interment taking place in the Masonic cemetery near Hillsboro.
The thing in which I found the people of California most interested in was the passage of the local option bill now before the Oregon legislature. In Lake county local option was passed 10 years ago, and as the vote consisted mostly of hop growers, the brewers boycotted Lake county hops, and the result was that they can hardly sell their hops at any price, and never except at a sacrifice. They now expect that if local option becomes a law in Oregon, the eastern brewers will boycott the hops grown in Oregon, and they will have a better market for their product. Brewers will seek California hops, and leave Oregon hops alone. I am not interested in the measure except as a hop grower, but I don't see how any grower can conscientiously vote in favor of the bill, when it means so much injury for the industry.
An Important Venture.
Articles of incorporation of the Klamath Canal company were filed in the office of the secretary of state yesterday, the capital stock of which is $1,000,000. The incorporators are all residents of Hollister, Cal., and Charles N. Hawkins is named as president and Paul F. Brown as vice-president. The company proposes to reclaim 2,000 acres of arid land in Klamath county by draining water from the Upper Klamath lake.
While returning from a professional visit into Polk county yesterday afternoon, Dr. J. N. Smith of this city was seriously injured in a runaway.
A Well-Known Face.
In this issue on page 8, the sailor in the scene, is a face from a pen sketch of a photographer. The person is Harry B. Glover, one of Uncle Sam's best known sailors. "Harry" was private aide to Commodore Dewey during the cruise of the Pacific squadron prior to the battle of Manila bay, and during the latter was the ship's printer. He was published aboard the Olympia that now famous pamphlet, the sailor's own story of the battle, entitled "The Bounding Billow." Mr. Glover and the writer of the Chicago advertisement are old friends. Mr. Glover during a recent friendly call was describing to a party of Portlanders the exciting scene during that great naval battle of May 1, 1898. Mr. Glover was very enthusiastic and his patriotic blood rose to the boiling point. When he had finished the writer said: "Harry, I believe you are the most patriotic man I ever saw. You are surely the kind that win, and 'Old Glory' is as proud of you as you are of 'Old Glory,' and I am going to run your picture in my next advertisement, but in such a way that it will not belittle you. I want to have the Pacific northwest see the face of one of Uncle Sam's most loyal sailors, tried and true." "All right," said Mr. Glover, "but do a good job of it." Turn to page 8 and see what you think of him.

ANNOUNCEMENT

I have come to the city of Portland to make it my future home, and to establish a business. I do this after investigating other cities of the Pacific coast, and in my opinion, Portland is the coming city of this section of Uncle Sam's domain; but before I can expect the full confidence of its citizens or ask their patronage, it is fitting that I should give an account of myself, and in so doing it is done in no spirit of egotism, but with a desire that the people may know with whom they are dealing should they favor me. I, therefore, copy from the "Jeweler's Review," a trade journal published in New York, an article written by another while I was connected with our Chicago office. No charge was made me for this article, directly or indirectly, and the writup was unsolicited. The article follows:

David Chambers.

"David Chambers, senior member of the wholesale optical house of Chambers, Inskeep & Co., is recognized as a pioneer optician of the west. He was born in McDonnellville, in the Buckeye state, Ohio, in 1855, but it was only a few years before his father moved to Ottumwa, Ia., where David Chambers spent his youth and got his education. Besides taking the common school and business college courses, he made a special study of pharmacy, and in 1870 started out in that business. Eight years later the sign, "D. Chambers & Co." marked the location of a prosperous retail drug store. The optical business, especially in the west, was in its infancy, and about the year 1880 Mr. Chambers began to make a particular study of it, and soon made it a branch of his growing drug business. Gradually besides doing a retail trade, the house undertook a wholesale business in the line of optical goods, and after a few years the drug business was sold out and the Ottumwa Optical company, a wholesale and retail house, continued the trade in optical goods only. In Mr. Chambers' present office, Chicago, hang pictures of the two Ottumwa stores, that of D. Chambers & Co., and that of the Ottumwa Optical company, and on the window shade of the latter can be seen the well known eyes that still serve as the sign of the house.
"After several years it became evident that Ottumwa did not present the best advantages as a distributing point for a wholesale house, and in 1888, the whole establishment was moved to Chicago, and shortly afterwards the name was changed to Chambers, Inskeep & Co. From its first location, at the corner of Wabash avenue and Van Buren street, the firm was obliged to move on account of water damage resulting from a neighboring fire, and the next year moved to a distributing point for a wholesale house, and in 1893, the present quarters of Chambers, Inskeep & Co., at 88 and 90 Wabash avenue, could not be improved upon; they are desirable from every standpoint. The business offices are pleasant and light, the show and stock room is commodious and the shop has every feature that makes for contented workmen and good work.
"Mr. Chambers was married in 1880 to Miss Annie Sunderland, daughter of Rev. James Sunderland, then of Ottumwa, Ia., now of Oakland, Cal. They have three sons, and the family home is in Woodlawn, on the south side of the city. Mr. Chambers is a man of uniform courtesy, of thorough knowledge of his subject, and of a pleasant and studious, and of careful business methods. A well known salesman connected with another optical house said of Chambers, Inskeep & Co.: "Their customers always stick, and this is because their goods are to be relied upon and because they make no mistakes and take no liberties with their customers. Consequently, once their customer, always their customer."
In closing would state that my business is exclusively optical; have equipped my establishment with proper machinery and skilled workmen to grind the most complicated lenses for any case of poor vision that may be prescribed for. I shall be pleased to have the public call and see my place of business, and will appreciate your patronage. Most respectfully,
D. CHAMBERS,
129 Seventh St., near Alder.

HAS A COURT HOUSE EVEN IF IT LOSES

NOVEL METHOD TAKEN BY LA GRANDE TO GAIN THE COUNTY CAPITOL LOCATION—ERECTS A $25,000 BUILDING BEFORE THE ELECTION IS HELD.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
La Grande, Or., June 3.—To build a $25,000 building to be used as a county court house before ever gaining a location of the county seat is a method being pursued by this city in its fight to become the capital of this county.
The question of the re-location of the county seat from Union to La Grande which will appear on the ticket for the county election which will take place Monday is therefore a matter of great importance to the people of this city.
Things look very favorable at this time for La Grande in this direction. The city has already commenced the erection of its building to be used as a court house, and it will be one of the finest buildings of the kind in eastern Oregon. If the location is voted down La Grande can then boast of a first class structure for a city hall.
Union is expected to vote for La Grande's 60, still things look very good for La Grande. La Grande is the largest and most centrally located point in the county, and the people in a good share of the county are compelled to change cars at La Grande when going to Union. La Grande will no doubt get the popular vote, but how far Union will take the matter into the courts afterwards is not yet known.

BAKER CITY STREET FIGHT ENDS IN DEATH

(Journal Special Service.)
Baker City, Or., June 3.—Jack Halsted, a saloon-keeper, was shot and killed by Lawellyn Legg, a locomotive fireman last night as the result of an altercation which started in a nearby restaurant.
Legg, it is said, personally abused a restaurant-keeper, Mrs. Laura Lahey, and when Halsted interfered made threatening remarks, which Halsted resented. Legg started up the street. Halsted followed, and as he neared Legg the latter whirled and fired a pistol at him, inflicting a wound which, within a few moments, proved fatal. Legg's story of the quarrel is that he was assaulted by both Mrs. Lahey and Halsted in the restaurant and knocked down before he ever thought of using a weapon. He was arrested a short time after the shooting.
The police of Portland were notified that Mrs. Halsted, mother of the murdered man, resided at University Park. This morning Chief Hunt detailed mounted Patrolman Croxford to find her and obtain information as to her wishes regarding the disposition of the body. After a long search the officer reported that no such woman lives there. A woman bearing that name resided there a year ago, but removed to Condon, Or.

AT THE THEATRES

BURLESQUE AT THE BAKER.
Society is beginning to take a marked interest in the Weber & Field burlesques now running at the Baker theatre and theatre parties are being formed for almost every performance. "Hurly Burly" and "The Royal Family" are the funniest entertainments that have ever been seen here, and it is stated there are others to follow which will be funnier still. One of the pleasing features of the performance is the singing of Sydney De Gray and Miss Lou Harlow and the bright and gingersy ensemble numbers of the chorus.
CORDBAY'S THEATRE.
The W. J. Elleford's production of the comedy drama "New York Day by Day" is drawing to a close. This and tomorrow evening will be the last performances. On Sunday, commencing with a matinee, he will present William Haworth's "Ensign."
"Cinderella," with an abundance of specialties, will be produced. This will be a treat to all.
There will be no change in the summer prices now prevailing at this popular house.
ARCADE THEATRE.
Even since the days of the early Egyptian people have loved to look at graceful dancers. This week at the
