Sixty-nine thousand cubic yards of first will be required to fill the first of three blocks of East Washington street between Union avenue and East Water street, which work will be commenced boon by the contractors Joplin & Gleb-lach. They will probably lay a spur of the City & Suburban line to Mount Pubor and haul the dirt in by car. The embankment will be 100 feet wide at the base of the fill and two months will be required for the work. Preliminary work has been started by the Oregon Water Power company toward filling on East Water street, which will prohably be taken up in earnest this fail. There is a movement on foot to fill East Stark street, between Water and Twelfth streets, if a district can be organized, so that the abutting property will not have to be burdened with too heavy an assessment.

H. Fujishama, director of the Japanese exhibit at the St. Louis fair, was in the city yesterday on his way home. Mr. Fujishama visited the Lewis and Clark fair grounds with William Harder, and was greatly pleased with the site chosen for the fair. He said that the natural beauty of the 1905 fair grounds surpassed that of St. Louis in every way. According to Mr. Fujishama, the Japanese exhibit to the fair next year will be as in the case of St. Louis, sent by private companies and not by the government.

never gave up the fight. Only once did Mrs. Maybrick speak for publication during the 15 years of her imprisonment. The late Mrs. Harriet Hubbard Ayer went to England and had a long talk with her in prison. At that time she insisted upon her innocence and hoped to live to prove it. This interview aroused the interest of the two continents, and King Edward, being able to weigh with human compassion the evidence in the case, finally pardoned her.

Since January 14 Mrs. Maybrick has been an inmate of a Church of England home, called the Epiphany, in a remote corner of Cornwall, a short way removed from the cathedral town of Trure. She was placed there by order of the home secretary. Akers-Douglas, as representing the king.

They need revision, because at first they were crude and we have outgrown them. New conditions have arisen, and with time and experience we have learned the difficulties that arise under them as they are now, and such changes as are made should be considered first by those directly interested in the mining industry, and then presented to our national and state law makers through the united voice of a representative body, such as the American mining congress.

mining man of limited means, and most, if not all of it, due to the insufficiency, of the laws by which titles are acquired. Certainly the uniformity of the location claims should be fixed, that there be no diversity of adjudication when these questions come into our courts, and the prospector, the forerunner that climbs the hills, encounters the dangers and undergoes the hardships by which discovery is made of our vast and varied mineral deposits, may easily be informed as to the law in the locality where he makes his discovery, and protected by the assurance that the law as applied in one location is the same in all.

The discovery of which followed the discovery of placer gold, was lo-cated in blanket veins, flat veins and fissure veins, the flat and fissure veins be ing simply cracks in the earth's sur-face, filled with mineral, as we sup-pose, either from volcanic influence from below or from water above, that from below or from water above, that which occurs by reason of surface influence being oxidized ore and that which comes from the body or from volcanic influences being of a different quality of ore. After years of practical experience, observation and development, it was discovered that these veins in many locations were flat or wavering, and in defining the property rights of the prospector and miner endless litigation began and has continued up to the present time in many of our mining castricts as to the rights of the party owning the apex to follow the vein through

"In no department of industry can government aid and supervision be of such direct and immediate benefit. By systematic exploration of the mountainous portions of the public domain, wast bodies of minerals may be brought to light which otherwise would long remain unknown. Every invention which utilizes one atherto unavailable is a main unknown. Every invention which utilizes ore matherto unavailable, is a benefit to the whole country. An improved process which cheapens the treatment of mineral, even a single dollar per ton, very largely increases the production of metal and the extent of the mining industry, as the amount of ore increases in a surprising ratio with each reduction of grade. It would be the business of the department, by an exhaustive series of experiments, to dishaustive series of experiment, by an ex-haustive series of experiments, to dis-cover or invent processes of treatment, mechanical or chemical, which will re-duce to a minimum the expense of treat-ment. By the dissemination of its re-ports, it would draw attention to the value of minerals that are now daily ports, it would draw attention to the value of minerals that are now dally passed over unnoticed.

"In fact the methods in which systematic investigation and experiment can increase the mineral product are more numerous than we can imagine in advance of experience. There are imperfections in our national laws which retard prosperity and production, which individuals seem powerless to amend, but which could be remedied without delay or recommendation of a mining department. For instance, in desiing with the large areas of mineral lands within the boundaries of land grants made by the governments of Spain and Mexico, the United States expressly reserves all gold, silver and quicksilver, presumably for the benefit of the discoverer or worker; thus providing a dual ownership heretofore unknown to our laws. But though more than 10 years have passed, not the slightest provision has been made for the use of any of those minerals; and so they remain unprospected and unworked. With a cabinet officer to attend to the interests of the mining community, this need would have been officially presented to congress, and remedial legislation obtained years ago.

"In every way the use of metallic and articles of metallic material.

"The establishment of a department of mining will not only be a proper recognition of the importance and magnitude of this great industry, but will have an inspiring practical effect in stimulating invention and industrial advancement, and the development of resources now dormant and uscless.

"Other countries with not one-tenth of our annual mineral output have ministers and departments devoted to ministers and departments devoted to minister and departments devoted to minister and the United States, not be behind them in granting this national encouragement and aid to the mining industry of our own land."

Secretary Irwin Mahon of the American mining congress has prepared the following paper on "Mining Laws," in which he makes a plea for the establishment of a department of mines and mining in the United States. The subject will come up for consideration at the meeting of the mining congress in this city, Mr. Mahon says:

"The mining laws of the country have stood as they are for more than 36 years. The first federal statute enacted in respect to mining and locating claims upon the public domain was passed in 1864, and amended in 1872, and remains unchanged up to the present time, with the exception of some slight enactments.

"When congress enacted the laws of 1864 and 1872, little was known of the formations so familiar to the practical miner of today. They need revision, because at first they were crude and we have outgrown them. New conditions have arisen, and with time and experience we have learned the difficulties that arise under them as they are now and such changes as are made should be considered first by those directly interested in the mining industry, and then presented to our national and state law makers through the united voice of a representative body, such as the American mining congress.

"Again, we have had a great amount of coatly and useless litigation, much of it a grevious burden upon the mining industry, and the final 75 cents an acre within two years of the date of the proposition of the fifth anniversary of his entry.

The object of the proceedings was to test the constitutionality of a city ordinance making it necessary for a man to secure permission of the city council before he can open a gravel pit or rock quarry on his own property.

It is contended that the ordinance delegates judicial powers to the council. Lind was arrested July 7 for opening a gravel pit on his property without securing a permit from the city council. He pleaded guilty before Municipal Judge Hogue July 14 and was fined $10. The fine was not paid and he was impresented.
