HIS VACATION WAS A FAILURE

W. BAKER FINDS IT UNBEARABLY MOT IN MOUNTAINS - PLENTY OF PISE NONE OF WHICH WILL BITE-TAKES A COLD BATH BY MISTAKE.

Sweltering in the heat and unable to satch any fish. William Baker, assistant agent at the Couch street dock, became disgusted and left his camp near the mmit of the Blue mountains and returned to Portland to get cool. While ft is hot here he says that the temperature where he established a temporary headquarters to enjoy a short outing was simply intolerable.

"I was at the head waters of the Naklah and Squaw creeks," said Mr. Baker last evening, in relating his experiences, "and both streams were full of the speckled beauties. But try as I would I could not induce them to bite. Finally I began to look around for the cause and was not long in locating it. On the slopes of the canyons there were large herds of cattle and sheep. There were also swarms of grasshop-pers. As the stock walked along and I noticed a dozen trout, each of which appeared to be about 15 inches long. Not being able to ensnare them in any other way, I conceived what I supposed was a brilliant plan. The water looked to be about four feet deep and I concluded to go in wading and chase them out into a shallow place where I thought it would be possible to catch them. I disrobed and plunged into the water. Imagine my surprise when I went down out of sight. I kept on going down but failed to touch bottom. When I finally came to the surface I decided that I did not want any fish and I started to swim for the shore. When I got out I was nearly frozen. After that got out I was nearly frozen. After that experience I made up my mind to re-turn to Portland and go to work. My vacation is ended for this year."

engaged in this work for nearly two years.

When everything was ready Tuesday a force of 150 men under Engineer G. I. Brown began the work of tearing down the big treatle and laying the track on its new roadbed. By 4 o'clock yesterday morning the entire stretch of 4,700 feet of treatle had been removed and the track relaid, and yesterday morning traffic was resumed.

Engineer Brown stated yesterday that the road will be completed into the city as far as Hawthorns avenue within 40 days, and then work will be commenced in filling East Water street according to the agreement with the council, made grared they drove the grasshoppers into the creeks, and the fish were getting all the food they wanted without assuming any risk of getting tied up in a dangerous alliance by nibbling a hook.

"They kept darting up in myriads grabbing the grasshoppers as fast as they feel into the stream. I fished in one locality for six hours and never got so much as a single bite. The cattle, sheep and grasshoppers were the sole cause of my poor luck.

"Over in a clear little pool by itself I noticed a dozen trout, each of which appeared to be about 18 inches long. Not being able to ensure them in any other way, I conceived what I supposed was a brilliant plan. Gustavus Eiseman gets no pay for the music he furnished St. David's Epis-copal church from March 1 to Septem-ber 21, 1963. A jury in Justice of the Peace Seton's court yesterday afternoon brought in a verdict to that effect. The case occupied the attention of the court nd jury from morning until late in the day.

Eliseman was engaged for one year, but there was a clause in his contract that said he must furnish satisfactory music. The Rev. Dr. George B. Van Waters, rector of St. David's, among others, took the stand yesterday and swore that the music was anything but satisfactory, and that had it been continued the doors of the parish might as well have been closed. Renters of pews were qutting the church and refusing to pay; members were seeking religious comfort at other churches and things were going to ruin, according to the were going to ruin, according to the

MONEY IN HAZEL BRUSH HOOP POLES

Seven hundred thousand hoop poles is 8. J. Garrison's contract for delivering this year to the Spreckles Sugar com-pany and a lime company at San Fran-cisco. Mr. Garrison and a force of five men are now busy at Boring. Clackamas county, making hoop poles from the larger growth of hazel brush. He has been in the hoop pole business for several years past. He at first operated near Canby, and when poles became scarce there, moved to Clackamas states. scarce there, moved to Clackamas station. As timber growth the hazelwood is of no value for anything except hoop poles, although J. Meindl of Oregon City did a thriving business for a few years manufacturing hazelwood into shavings, and shipping the product to Montans, where it was used by breweries to clarify beer. Mr. Meindl has quit handling hazelwood shavings, but hoop poles are still a staple product, and thrifty growths of hazel brush are becoming scarcer.

The fact that lumber shipments by rail from Portland for the first six months of 1904 are less by 3,077 cars than the shipments for the correspond-ing period of 1993 would be discouraging ing period of 1903 would be discouraging were it not a fact that the larger bulk of the shipments are being made by water. California from San Francisco to San Diego affords a large market for Oregon lumber, and the bulk of the shipments to these points is made by water on account of the prevailing freight rates. The rate by rail to San Francisco and common points is $3.10 per ton, while water shipments cost about $4 per thousand. The average weight of a thousand feet of rough lumber is $3.200 pounds, and of dressed lumber, kiln-dried, 2,000 pounds or thereabouts.

It therefore costs $5.10 per thousand
