A Long Beath Boll.

The general staff at St. Fetersburg to day gives out a statement that the Russian losses during the retreat from Liac Yang are 5,000 killed, wounded and prisoners. This, however, it is believed does not represent a fifth of the losse in the 10 days' action at Lias Yang which ended in the flight to Mukden. The railway station, which is outside the walled city of Liao Yang, and about a mile west of it, fell into the hands of General-Oku's troops, two days ago. The Russian stationmaster and his crew augmented to several thousand men by soliders impressed into service, succeeded in making way with much of the rolling-stock and destroying all that they could not rush out of the way of the Japanese. Their retreat, however, is too rapid, it is believed, to permit the Russians is destroy the railroad as they go.

The situation today seems to be this: Gen Kuropatkin, while hard pressed from the cust and the south, still interpiouse between the enemy and the railroad as trong body of troops. He is repeated the season and expects fluxy 20,000 pounds this year.

too rapid, it is believed, to permit the Russians to destroy the railroad as they go.

The Situation Today.

The situation today seems to be this: Gen. Kuropatkin, while hard pressed from the east and the south, still interposes between the enemy and the railroad a strong body of troops. He is retreating parallel with and to the east of the railroad. Generals Kuroki and Nodsu have effected a junction of forces north of the Taitse river, and are pressing forward in the hope of cutting off Kuropatkin from Mukden, from which the Russians are still 30 miles distant. Gen. Oku at last report from the front was on the south side of the Taitse, But it is believed that by this time he has crossed the river and is pursuing along the line of the railway. His intention, it it believed, is to sweep around to the west of the Russian retreat by forced marches and to execuate a flank movement. Kuroki and Nodsu are trusted to give the enemy such as fight that their retreat will be necessarily slow, thus allowing Oku time to accomplish his part of the general plan.

That this is undoubtedly the intention of the Japanese is evidenced by the well known fact that in Tokio jt is considered that the whole worth of the present campaign rests on the destruction of Kuropatkin's army. Should Kuropatkin escape, and gain Mukden in safety the Russians it is believed will be in really better position than the Japanese. General Linevitch, according to a St. Petersburg rumor has arrived at a point not far north of Mukden with troops for the relief of Kuropatkin.

That the Japanese.

That the Japanese realize this is shown by their every movement. If on the other hand they can encompass Kuropatkin's defeat, they believe that they may be able to drive the caar to treat for peace, rather than to continue the tremendous slaughter of his armies.

A dispatch from Yental is puszling the military authorities here. It says: "Desultory fighting is reported in the neighborhood of Mukden."

A week ago a discredited report was received that several regiments of Japanese had appeared to the north and east of Mukden but nothing further was heard from them and they were supposed to be myths. Can it be possible, ask military experts, that the Japanese have thrown men to the north and are prepared to make Kuropatkin fight his way in the city which he looks upon as his harbor of safety? his harbor of safety?

of this dispatch can be had at this time, it is said that the destruction wrought by the explosion was tremendous.

From the fact that the officials here have received word from the army that is now bombarding Port Arthur to the effect that they made a desperate attack on the line of forts from Antseshan to Ksekitvan, and after a long and bloody battle occupied the heights of Tung Chaltau, it is considered probable that the story of the explosion is true.

The dispatch also conveys the information that from their point of vantage on the heights of Tung Chaltau, the mikado's men began a terrible bombardment of the pown. The ships in the harbor are also reported as being seriously endangered by shells, and one is said to have been disabled.

It was reported at the Good Samaritan hospital this morning that Policeman Ole Nelson, who was shot by Charles W. Walton, passed a restful night and is much improved. The physicians say that his chances of recovery are now very good.

While this is true, a statement reaching District Attorney Manning this morning to the effect that Nelson was dying caused him to take precautions against the selesse of Walton. Through Attorney John F. Legan, word was sent to the efficials that ball should not be accepted in a less amount than $10,000, and that care should be exercised in the selection of sureties. If Nelson should die, Walton's offense would not be beliable.

"I would hold him all right," declared Bheriff Word. "If he gets out of here on any order it will be after I have been served by the courts with a writ of mandate."
