MANY TO BLAME FOR FIRE BOAT FAILURE

CHIEF CAMPBELL ACCUSES OFFICERS OF YERBONAT OF OVER-LOOKING AND STOKER KNOWS OF NEGLIGENCE IN HIS VERBAL REPORT TO FIRE BOARD.

Over-zealousness on the part of the officers to make a good showing and negligence on the part of Stoker Ed Brown is the cause attributed by Chief Campbell of the fire department for the failure of the fireboat George H. Williams to make a creditable showing at the fire at Mead's wharf on the waterfront last Saturday evening.

Chief Campbell made a verbal report to the fire commissioners at their meeting yesterday afternoon, but a complete stenographic report of all the testimony taken at the investigation, which was held Wednesday, will be presented to the commission at a special meeting tomorrow morning.

"The officers of the boat are a little to blame," said the chief, "for they were a little over-zealous to make a good showing. In their anxiety to get to the fire they overlooked several little things which they will never do again, for it is experience which teaches them."

"The stoker also showed negligence. He did not have a sufficient supply of coal on hand with which to fire the engine, but this had to be brought from the bunkers by the men after the fire had started. An overflow of water from the exhaust came into the fire room and the stoker failed to notify the engineer to stop the engine."

"There was nothing at all wrong with the fireboat. She is as sound as a dollar, which was demonstrated after suit of steam was generated with which to work the pumps."

G. A. Gordon, the contractor who built the fireboat house, again brought his claims before the commission for extra work. The matter was referred to the executive board, together with the resolution recently passed by the commission rejecting the claims.

Chief Campbell called the attention of the commission to the frequency of the fires at the crematory dump, stating that much fuel was used in the engines at these fires and that the trouble could all be averted with more care on the part of the crematory crew in putting out their fires after the refuse is taken from the crematory.

The chief was asked to distribute the new hydrants throughout the city where he thinks they will be of the most service. A resolution from the council was read, asking the commission to use rigid economy.

"What do you mean by rigid economy," quickly queried William Fieldner. "Do they think we squander money? Wouldn't it be a wise thing to pass a resolution in our body demanding the council to be a little more economical?"

LIVE WIRE KNOCKS HORSE TO GROUND

Knocked down by contact with an electric wire which had been cut by linemen in the employ of the Oregon Water Power & Railway company, at Front and Madison streets yesterday, a horse attached to a surrey driven by W. C. Bretzell arose and staggered blindly upon the sidewalk, where it was caught and held.

The knees of the horse were skinned by its fall and it was covered with mud. The lines broke at the same time and a runaway would doubtless have occurred had not the horse been dazed by the shock. The wire struck the animal on the forehead.

MAN SUFFERS FROM TYPHEF AND ARSON

PROPERTY OF JOHN HAVLIK, A WILLAMETTE VALLEY FARMER, IS DESTROYED BY UNKNOWN GRIZZLY-BEAST MACHINERY IS SWALLOWED INTO WATER.

Stealing the machinery from his boat and then setting her adrift; touching a torch to his barn a few minutes later, totally destroying the structure and its contents; returning the following night and burning another barn, the flames from which set the forest afire, these are some of the attacks which John Havlik, who lives on Willamette slough, says have been made on his property by unknown parties during the past few days.

Mr. Havlik was in the city yesterday afternoon and reported his troubles to the police.

"I got in a small row boat and started in pursuit of the launch. Just when I was about to overtake her I happened to look around and saw the men setting fire to the barn. I finally overtook her, the launch went on and I saw the men put the fire out. But before I got there the flames were so far advanced that they were beyond control. The building, together with all of its contents, was soon in ashes."

"Being that I was powerless to save the property, I again started in pursuit of the launch. I finally overtook her, she was drifting helplessly about, and you can imagine my surprise when I discovered that all of her machinery had been removed and thrown overboard. I loved my barn and she is now in Portland undergoing repairs."

"I returned home and spent the following day figuring on what course I should take in the matter. When night came I began to make preparations to retire. At about 10 o'clock I went to the door to look around and I saw my other barn in a mass of flames. My three cows and nearly all my property were under its roof and I do not know I could save them. But the cows were gotten out too late and they soon died."

"Who the criminals are and what motive they had I am at a loss to know. I suppose, however, that some one is known to me has a grudge against me. The flames from the second barn set the woods afire and they are still burning. My losses may be heavier."

PURE FOOD BILLS MAY BE RESULT

J. W. Bailey, president of the national association of state dairy and food departments, left yesterday for St. Louis to attend the session and the international pure food congress.

He will be followed in a few days by Professor A. L. Nisely, state chemist in the Oregon Agricultural college. Mr. Bailey says the congress this year will be the most important held in many years as it will be international, having representatives from many of the European countries, Porto Rico and Hawaii.

"Our efforts to secure uniformity in all the states. This we think can best be accomplished by the enactment of a national pure food law, and then the various states can conform to it and add whatever special features that are desirable. The trouble now is that the manufacturers of food products do not know what standard to maintain. Different states have differing standards, and the manufacturers who make a product that he can sell in Washington might not be able to dispose of it under the Oregon food law. The patent medicine men are the most active opponents of the proposed laws, but our bills include regulation of the sale of drugs and medicines."

WALKING ARSENALS OUT AFTER BRUIN

Loaded down with a small arsenal, four steamboat men weighed anchor yesterday and went cruising for bear and other large game. At Vancouver, B. C., they were to disembark and take the trail leading to the foothills in the vicinity of Mt. St. Helena, where they expect to make a record in the slaying line.

The party is composed of Jack Wendell, chief engineer on the Henderson; F. Sundry, assistant engineer on the same vessel; James Wendell, assistant engineer on the Sarah Dixon, and Fred Stinson, mate of the So Wondor. Each of them was equipped with a repeating rifle, a six-shooter, a compass and a tide book. If the game holds out that long the men expect to be gone 30 days. Some time ago they heard that bears were thick up that way and causing the prospectors and ranchmen no end of trouble by their familiarity. By means of the compass they expect to find the exact location of the bruin, without any trouble.

"The pelts have been sold in advance," said Wendell, just before taking his departure.
