Immigration departments of the local railway lines are busy handling the arrivals from eastern states on account of the prevailing colonist rates, and also with correspondence that continues to originate in middle west and southern territory. H. C. Magnum of Oklahoma has written for a large amount of Oregon advertising matter and is arranging to bring a colony of people from Oklahoma, where immigration has been overdone and there is no more land at reasonable prices for new settlers.

There were many friends in attendance at the funeral services Sunday over the late Daniel C. McKercher. The services were under the auspices of the grand lodge A. F. & A. M. of Oregon, of which he had been an officer. The remains were removed to the chapel of the Scottish Rite Masons where impressive ritualistic services were held. The interment was in Riverview cemetery.

YOUTHFUL KOBBER HOLDS UP FARMER

Nothing daunted by the fatal mistake of William Bowen and Harry Morgan, who early yesterday morning attempted to hold up and rob Policeman Thomas Taylor and were captured, a man, supposed to be quite young, at 2 o'clock this morning held up and robbed Casper Puhler, a farmer, at Seventh and Glisan streets. The rural visitor, more fortunate than many victims of Portland highwaymen, had made a change of trousers before going upon the streets, and had left $60 in his room by mistake. All he had with him was 25 cents, which the robber took.

Acting Detective Vaughn was detailed to investigate the robbery.

FINE FRUIT SECURED

E. C. Giltner, secretary of the state commission of the Lewis and Clark fair, has returned from Ashland where he secured 150 boxes of the finest fruit in Jackson county for exhibition purposes at the fair. The fruit will be kept in cold storage until opening day. Strawberries are growing in profusion in Jackson county, according to Mr. Giltner. They are sold at all trains and are regarded as nothing of a curiosity at this time of the year by Jackson county people. Mr. Giltner purchased strawberries at 15 cents a box.

AND THE BACK OF THEM AT THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSI-TEMPORÁBY QUARTERS IS MET.

"When we left here September 5," said Edward Holman, who with Mrs. Holman has just returned from St. Louis, "It was with completed arrangements for a room with bath at the Inside inn. When we reached that hostelry we were escorted to an apartment in which a crude shower-bath apparatus stood forth, and the toilet was a partnership affair with the adjoining room, in which partitions played a faulty part. I went down to the clerk to protest that my contract, which was for the consideration of $7 a day for room only, called for a bath. Oh, you want a tub bath? said he. That will cost $11 a day for the two of you."

tion. This plot, equal to half a lot in Portland, had been purchased for $18.000, and a pressed-brick four-story building put up for the fair. Rooms were plain, clean and comfortable, and charges $5 a day for two. All water in St. Louis is bad—so bad that we drank mineral water. I never took a drink but that I thought of Bull Run and showered blessings upon the good citizens who constructed our water system. None better exists in the east:
"St Louis day at the fair brought out

None better exists in the east."

"St. Louis day at the fair brought out in the papers a funny feature of local patriotism. Officials gave the attendance that day as 404,000 people. Next morning a woman came out with the announcement that she had gone in and out again 76 times and claimed title to being the champion repeater. She was quickly contradicted by a man who said he had entered 106 times, and must hold the championswip for repeating. Those with season tickets would enter one gate, pass out immediately and return again. This fact will make it apparent that the total admissions credited to St. that the total admissions credited to St. Louis day did not indicate that so many people entered the grounds. But the fair is great—in fact, bewildering. You cannot cover it all and will not remem-ber a hundredth of what you are able

St. Louis Streets Clean.

"The fair grounds and streets of St. Louis are kept remarkably clean. They have one device that might be adopted here to advantage. Sprays from street-sprinklers are arranged at an angle, like our street brooms. As they pass along the jets of water drive the dirt into the gutters, and thence into the sewers, cleansing the crevices and interstices better than a broom, and saving the labor of handling debris. In the city and grounds a special force picks up every scrap of paper, where people lunch and elsewhere. Galvanized iron barrels, too high for a pedestrian to look into, are arranged conveniently to receive all sweepings, giving the streets a remarkably clean, neat aspect.

Citisens Could Do It. "Why cannot the citizens of Portland get together and erect three or four hotel buildings, like that I indicated, have them plain as possible inside so far as woodwork is concerned, but plastered, and have the first two stories rooms with baths, third-story rooms without baths, and fourth-story great rooms filled with cots? After the fair is over these buildings could be finished inside and be made permanent. These need not be on business streets, but out on Sixteenth, Twentieth or Twenty-third streets. Each should be some distance from the other and made to cover about three lots. If they are leased, the people from the other and made to cover about three lots. If they are leased, the people of Portland should have some restrictions in regard to rates, for every one is willing to pay some higher at a fair, but three and four times regular prices will lessen the attendance. We cannot afford to do as large cities do, for they have the population we want to attract here."
