MAY LIBRARIES DOT WIDE OREGON

Reports to the State Organization Are of a Very Encouraging Character.

COORDINATE FACTOR WITH PUBLIC SCHOOLS

With More of Them We Would Break Record for Culture and Refinement.

The reports brought in to the meeting of the Oregon Library association this morning from the smaller towns of the state were indeed encouraging and showed the rapid growth in importance of the library.

The public library of Eugene reported its organization as a circulating library in 1893, by the Women's Fortnightly club, with 275 books. It has now over 900, is public, the Carnegie offer has been accepted and the building will soon be commenced.

Salem's library, made public a year ago, has now 1,844 books, from a beginning of 200. It also was started by the Women's club.

Dundleton reported 4,000 volumes, and a plan to enlarge the building. It is under the auspices of the Commercial association, which has kept it alive.

Troutdale has a small library and reading-room of 536 volumes. Oregon Agricultural college has 4,000 and some 10,000 unbound pamphlets.

Patric university has about 3,000, and Ashland, under the auspices of the Epworth league, 1,780.

Salem reported a small library among the Odd Fellows and the Masons, composed mostly of fiction, because its purpose is largely for recreation. All of these were the outgrowth of small collections of fiction mostly out of which developed the educational.

Professor F. G. Young of the sociology department of the University of Oregon, gave the paper of the day on "The Function of the Public Library Among the Agencies for Social Betterment." He spoke of the coming of the American Library association to Oregon as a missionary movement which should awaken the state to the value of public libraries.

Every congress or convention that meets here this year, he said, "is of material benefit, it arouses an investigatory spirit in those interested." In the library can be found the best information about all the assembling bodies, and here, to be found their reports. The exhibits also are educational and will afford opportunities for the progress of the national conference.

Libraries and schools are coordinate factors in education, and it is not so much what the child learns that measures the success of the school, as what he learns to love. The school should cooperate with the library to develop the literary taste. We should strive to outfit Oregon with public libraries, and even if they seem to be the allies of material progress alone, ideas and ideals will soon be in the saddle, instead of mere things, and then Oregon will break the record for culture and contentment.

At the afternoon session W. L. Brewster, president of the Oregon association of librarians, gave the address, "The Home is Just South of the Town of Milwaukie." The Zanders family is well known. The home is just south of the town of Milwaukie.
