HEAD OF LIFE-SAVING SERVICE AT EXPOSITION
Modest Man Who Has Dragged From the Grave Many Scores of People.

In charge of the government life-saving station on the peninsula at the Lewis and Clark exposition is Captain John S. Clark, one of the most interesting characters in one of the most interesting branches of the government service.

used to climb upon the raft; then a surfboat was launched, which, after taking aboard three passengers, capsized.

There is nothing about my work or my life that would make what you call a story," he said. "I was born in Hillsdale, New York, and have spent nearly all my life on the sea.

Under him at the local station are eight men, the pick of the service, selected because of their ability to perform exhibition drills with an alacrity and eagerness equal to the most urgent emergency case.

Among the most famous wrecks in which Captain Clark has assisted to rescue the perishing were those of the Strathblane, the Potrimpas, the Point Loma and others.
