

PIONEERS GLORY
IN WORK THEY DID

And Oregon Rejoices to Honor the Builders of the Great Commonwealth.

EXPOSITION GROUNDS

Review Work They Did in Years
Gone by and Find it Good.

Young Portland was still asleep this morning when Old Oregon was running for streetscars to get to the exposition grounds. For it was pioneer day and the old folks were alive with expectation.

Their vari-colored badges, showing the dates of their arrival in Oregon—from '38 to '60—were conspicuous on the grounds before the gatekeepers had fairly opened their eyes.

At 11 o'clock the pioneers, most of them bowed with age, gathered in the auditorium, and for the first time since the fair opened the building was filled to its capacity.

Captain O. C. Applegate of Klamath Falls called the meeting to order and introduced President H. W. Goode, who spoke a few words of welcome.

It has been my privilege to stand before many audiences since this fair opened," said the president, "but on no occasion have I felt equally honored and thrilled with pride as when I address the men and women who made this exposition possible."

Captain Applegate made an eloquent response on behalf of the pioneers and read a poem on the work of the pioneers. President Wright of the Pioneer Association said that he had made arrangements to bring to Portland for this day a pioneer of eastern Oregon—James Lane—who is now absent.

When good was a hole in the ground. "This same old man," continued President Wright, "was once told that he must have come to Oregon when Mount Hood was a hole in the ground. He replied: 'Oh, yes; long before that.' And some of you who sit before me came here when Portland was a hole in the ground—yes, long before that. How does it feel to you today, as you sit here in the midst of this great and magnificent exposition? What are you thinking of today? Are you proud? Are you delighted? Are you satisfied?"

At the close the pioneers posed for the photographer, then dispersed for lunch. This afternoon they are holding high links in the Washington building, which has been turned over to them for the rest of the day, to do with as they please.

In the main hall of the Armory last evening the pioneers were feasted by the women of this city.

Regarding the plot to elect Sharkey president of the council it was learned today that he saw every Republican nominee for the council as soon as the primaries had been held and solicited pledges that they would support him for the position.

It is stated that the chief element in the plan is Sharkey's appointment as chairman of the street committee, with the hope that the control of city contracts may remain in the hands of the machine, and that former jobs and schemes that characterized the public work of the past three years may be continued.

Another important proposal of the machine is to retain control of the issuance of licenses, inasmuch as that affords quite a strong political pull with the new and old forces, in which the Matthews machine is understood.

It is known that the desire to retain control of all matters pertaining to contracts, as far as the council is concerned, arises as much from the necessity of covering up past acts as from the wish to continue to enjoy political favors that accrue to those who handle that portion of the city's business.

The new executive is known to favor protection of the people's money and as long as it is in the hands of the present matter will be able to prevent a large amount of pilfering that is commonly thought to have taken place in the past three years.

The Brewers and Wholesale Liquor Dealers' association and its allied forces are also interested in electing Sharkey and in taking from the new mayor the appointment of the standing committee. The situation is regarded by them as desperate, and they are known to be putting forth Herculean efforts to recoup as much as is possible from the wreck that was caused to their hopes when Dr. Harry Lane was chosen mayor of Portland.
