MUCH ENTHUSIASM AT CHAUTAUQUA

Attendance Today Fully Equals That of Other Sessions of Meeting.

AFTERNOON PROGRAM OPENS WITH READING

Professor Kemp, Joaquin Miller, Rev. Roland D. Grant and Mrs. Florence Kelly Prove Drawing Cards and Large Crowds Applaud Carter.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Gladstone Park, Or., July 20.—The attendance so far today equals that of yesterday, and it is being augmented by every incoming train. Professor Kemp opened the afternoon program with a reading which brought everybody into the auditorium on time and held them there.

Dr. Roland D. Grant is giving his lecture, "Job's Wife Vindicated," and is holding a fine, appreciative audience. It is remembered by old Chautauquans that at the first assembly, 12 years ago, Dr. Grant gave one of the first and best addresses of the three days' program and his ringing words of patriotism will never be forgotten.

The ball game today will be between the Y. M. C. A. and Chemawa, and Carter the magician will give an entirely new program in the evening.

Big Day Yesterday.

Chautauqua ran "three ring" attractions all day yesterday, giving the fullest programs. The morning was spent with the usual class work, a notable feature of which is the large number of people that come up to attend these classes on the morning trains, who are visitors in Portland. Yesterday were found registered Mrs. Boklage, St. Paul, Minnesota; Mrs. H. Fitzsimonds, Walhalla, North Dakota; Mrs. Matt Skeen, Mineral Wells, Texas; Mrs. H. S. Smith, Northampton, Massachusetts; Rae Rickers, Orlando, Florida; Mrs. J. C. Nelson, Philipsburg, Montana; Waldo Canfield, Kansas City; Mrs. Alice Appleby, Mount Union, Pennsylvania.

Study of Poe.

There was much interest in Dr. B. J. Handley's classes in American literature in the study of Poe. The classes were made to see in the small output of Poe's verse a keen lyric quality, and the wild and weird and too often the ghostly in his prose tales. Special attention was given to the tales "A Descent Into the Maelstrom," "The Fall of the House of Usher" and the poems "For Annie," "The Raven" and "The Belle." Miss Gertrude Johnson of Willamette university, who gave much study to interpret Poe, read finely from "The Gold Bug." Tomorrow special interest will be in the study of American historians.

The scheduled hourly concert was cut short by half an hour, that the lion, which had been unexpectedly trapped, might be displayed to the admiring audience, and when Joaquin Miller appeared upon the platform as the bright particular star with a train of Chautauqua luminaries, the large audience broke into a storm of applause and applauded on and on for every point the poet made, or every pose he struck. "The Beauty of Everything" was the theme of which he sang, and several of his favorite poems were recited with dramatic effect.

Mrs. Florence Kelly, executive secretary of the National Consumers' league, gave the lecture of the afternoon on "Our Child Workers." She took exception to the assertion of the poet that "there was nothing ugly in the world," and thought that if he could leave his mountain home and go into some of the tenement districts of our large cities and see little children working in cellars, reeking with filth and disease, he would find some decidedly ugly things in this world. Mrs. Kelly turned the attention of the audience for a moment to conditions in Oregon, saying that while no such conditions yet obtained in Portland or the state, as elsewhere, she had seen smaller boys carrying messages in Portland than she ever saw in New York, and she had seen a beautiful girl under 16 serving ice cream at 11 p. m., and found the girl would have several miles to ride alone after the store was closed to reach her home. The messenger service, for small boys, she condemned in no uncertain terms.

Tendered a Reception.

At the close of the program the officers of the State Federation of Women's Clubs tendered Mrs. Kelly a reception at their headquarters, where they served iced fruit punch and cakes. Several hundred embraced the opportunity of meeting Mrs. Kelly personally.

Carter, the magician, delighted a large crowd in the evening with his sleight-of-hand performance, cabinet work and all-around good tricks.

She was shockingly mutilated and died almost immediately. The bull had to be shot before the child could be taken from the corral.

THROWS NITRIC ACID UPON TEAM OF HORSES

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Walla Walla, Wash., July 20.—The identity of "Jack, the Acid Thrower" remains a profound mystery despite the fact that the police have been furnished with a fairly good description of the man and have kept a close watch for the fellow. Reports of damaged clothing still continue to pour in. The fellow changed his tactics late Tuesday night by spraying a team left standing in the street. The horses, maddened with pain, screamed in agony and nearly got away from a half dozen men attracted to the scene. Traces of nitric acid were found on the horses' bodies after they had been quieted down.
