

DESIGNOT AMOUC WANTED MAN

Escaped Convict Captured on the Trail Charged With Burglary, Suspected of Robbery

CRUDE EXPLANATION OF A BULLET WOUND

Police Think Injury Was Received While Escaping From Barber's Pharmacy — Are Seeking Collins Who Also Left Salem Prison.

Shot through the hand while committing a crime in this city, so the police and sheriff's office believe. Edmund Louignot, an escaped Salem convict, who was recaptured yesterday afternoon at the fair grounds on the Trail, is held at the county jail for identification before being returned to the penitentiary. It is believed that Louignot is the man who broke into Barber's pharmacy, 353 Morrison street, on the morning of July 16, and that he was shot in the hand by Special Police Dan Connors. Attorney Fred V. Holman, who was held up by two robbers Tuesday night, exchanging shots with one of them, called at the county jail this morning and took a good look at Louignot. He says the convict looks like the man whom he shot at four times but that he cannot be positive.

The convict tells a story about being wounded since the escape which the authorities think is false. He made his escape with Fred Collins, both serving sentences for horse stealing, June 6, while engaged in road work on the slough, one and one half miles from the penitentiary. Two or three days after, he says, he saw an old gun lying by the side of the road, and picking it up was examining it when it was discharged, the bullet tearing his left hand.

Chief of Police Gritzmacher was apprised of the wound in Louignot's hand this morning and had Police Clerk Leonard refer to the records. It was discovered that the convict resembles the man who was shot at by Special Policeman Connors as he broke through a glass door in the rear of Barber's pharmacy and ran. This wound in Louignot's hand appears to have been received about that time.

The police think Louignot has been engaged in holdups in Portland since he made his escape from the penitentiary and request that all persons held up in the last six weeks call at the county jail to see if they can identify him. Several men were held up by two highwaymen and if the police theory is accurate, Collins may have engaged in this work with him. Both the police and sheriff's deputies are now looking for Collins.
