

TRINITY OPEN FOR FIRST TIME TODAY

Portland's fame as a city of beautiful churches has received added lustre since the completion of Trinity Episcopal church, at the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Everett streets. It is one of the most pleasing and satisfying examples of ecclesiastical architecture to be found in the northwest.

Pure Gothic in style, on the lines of the early English, the building is at once simple in design and stately in effect. The square tower at the northeast corner rises 75 feet. Broad stone steps lead up to the two vestibules and to the handsome main entrance, over which is the beautiful memorial window commemorating Bishop Scott, Oregon's first Episcopal bishop. In each transept is a rose window of rich design and coloring.

The material of the building is basaltic rock, rock faced and with trimmings of cement to match. The walls are backed with concrete. The length of the building is 181 feet and it is 68 feet in width. One transept is occupied by the baptistry and chapel and the other by the choir and clergy vestries. Much of the stained glass in the windows was in the old Trinity church which was burned, and this is especially true of the Bishop Scott memorial window above the main entrance. The building has a seating capacity of 1,000.

The $120,000 organ is the finest in the northwest. The interior of the church is particularly pleasing and harmonious. The altar is of white marble and was designed by D. C. Lewis, the architect of the building. All the exposed woodwork, trusses and beams are of Oregon fir, quarter sawed. The fan system of heating and ventilating is used and is said to be the most perfect to be found in any church on the Pacific coast.

The Trinity chimes, installed at a cost of $6,000, have already become famous as their melody has been heard repeatedly within the past two or three weeks.

The first religious service to be held in the new Trinity church will take place this morning and will be conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. A. Morrison. Bishop Morris will assist.

manhood and womanhood to give to us just that culture and refinement which has proved so surprising to a number of eastern people.

In the absence of Governor Frank Higgins of New York, Lieutenant Lion M. Bruce of that state, acting as his official representative, responded.

"The people of the state of New York," he said, "are proud of the position accorded them in the northwest and at this exposition and are deeply grateful for the welcome extended them by the people of the northwest.

"This is the only territory over which flies the flag of the United States which is ours by right of discovery.

"We are proud of the work that has been done by the people of the northwest. My friends, there is no north, no south, no east, no west. We are all Americans. There are great sectional questions which have caused these distinctions. Yours is that of irrigation. And we of New York are just as anxious that the arid lands of this northwest be irrigated as you are.

"There never has been one word of protest uttered by the people of New York against the enormous sums appropriated for the purpose of irrigating lands thousands of miles away from the markets of the east. Why should they, when it is those very same markets which receive the benefits of irrigation in the way of commerce? We of New York want you to irrigate. There are no small people in the west, but there are a few in the east.

"You have a Chinese question here, too. We of New York want the open door, want the doors open to the immense commerce that you of the west have with the orient. We of New York want you of the west to have the best of the orient, and if coolies are not of the best—keep them out."

President Goode followed with references to the willingness with which the commissioners of New York at the fair have handed over their building and lent their aid and experience in making the social functions of the exposition a success.

S. Fred Nixon, speaker of the New York assembly, was then presented. His eloquence in depicting the feeling of good fellowship which exists in the hearts of the people of New York toward the people of the northwest impressed the audience.

"Oregon has her tall trees, but New York has her big men," said he. The educational system of New York state, which the speaker stated has spread to all parts of the civilized world, was extolled.

"America," by the Administration band, concluded the ceremonies, and a general reception followed in the parlors of the New York building.

Classic Building Is Dedicated With Appropriate Ceremonies—Progress of West Is Hope of Crowded East, Say Speakers.

The Empire State of the Union yesterday made acknowledgments to the inland empire. Men of national repute gathered in the New York building at the exposition about 11 o'clock and joined in the celebration of New York day. Samuel B. Ward, vice-president of the New York Lewis and Clark commission, presided. Rev. J. E. H. Simpson of Portland delivered the invocation. Governor Chamberlain in his address said:

"A noted gentleman told me the other day that he was very greatly surprised to find so much culture and refinement in this northwest of ours. A rather doubtful compliment, that. There ought not to be any surprise. We have had the best blood in the United States to come here and to make the best citizenship in the United States.

"The best the country had to give," the speaker concluded, "has come to us, and has helped us to make this great northwest what it is today. And New York herself has done more than her share in giving to us the best of her

A nice thing about friends is the way you can keep them by not lending money to them.

A man is hardly ever so bad he couldn't be better.

A girl is old enough to know better when her mother can tell her anything she thinks she doesn't know.
