

How Bankers Detect Forgeries

"A swindler usually encounters little difficulty in obtaining a letter of introduction to a bank if the introducer, through a proposed business transaction, anticipates some benefit in giving it."

More than $50,000 is spent every year by the American Bankers' association in running down burglars and other criminals who have robbed members of the association. This amount is half as much as the total loss to the banks through swindlers, but because of the effect on the criminal classes in restraining them from attacking banks which are members of the association the money is considered well spent.

As an example of the practical work of the American Bankers' association, Colonel Branch cited the case of George Collins, alias Fred Lewis, who, with William Rudolph, robbed the Bank of Union, Missouri, December 27, 1902.

After murdering Schumacher Rudolph and Collins escaped, but were subsequently located and arrested by representatives of the American Bankers' association at Hartford, Connecticut, March 1, 1903, at which time $3,600 stolen from the Bank of Union was recovered.

"In a few days the middleman appears with one or two small checks drawn by D for certification, to determine if there is any suspicion. If the forgery is not discovered by the bank drawn on, the forger has a moment in which to operate before the issuing bank receives the draft and discovers the fraud. Meanwhile D gradually withdraws by checks cash representing the amount deposited."

Senate Committee Changes. Washington, Oct. 29, New York Sun. A reorganization of the committees of the senate may be accomplished at the extra session in November, but it is generally believed that the matter will be postponed until the regular session in December.

Death and retirement have caused a number of vacancies at the heads of important committees. The death of Senator Pitkin of Connecticut, both within the year, have made it possible for a far western man to go to the chairmanship of the judiciary committee, which has belonged to old-fashioned men for a decade.

Mr. McPherson's Years Have Been Full of Interest and Excitement. WAS FIRST WHITE BORN IN THE STATE OF IOWA. Played With the Indian Children, Saw the Magnificent Temple of Nauvoo in Flames, and Says Her Days Were Sober Gray.

Born, christened, grew up, went to school, married and kept house. That would sum up the life history of many, many people who still talk on about themselves and their deeds and actually think there has been incident and variety in their lives.

Mr. McPherson was the daughter of Dr. Isaac Galloway, army surgeon. He went to Iowa as a physician and agent among the Indians and soon became their friend. When the fierce Blackhawk war broke out and the Indians were on the warpath, their chief sent runners to the medicine man who was the red man's friend, and warned him to flee to the fort. His family was saved from the massacre.
