

CATTLE OF OREGON WITHOUT PEER

So Say Judges Who Are Distributing Awards at Livestock Show.

THOUSANDS ADMIRE SPLENDID ANIMALS

Victories Won by State Breeders Applauded by Crowds Whose Interest in Contests Is Greater Than Was Shown at Other Fairs.

With no other special attraction than the stock show, the attendance at the Lewis and Clark exposition up to 11:20 a. m. today was 13,840, a very unusual figure. Yesterday's total attendance was 23,450.

Greater enthusiasm was never displayed, it is stated by visiting stockmen to the livestock show, than that which is daily shown by the crowds which fill the huge stands on all sides of the immense showing at the fair.

The judges, without exception, say that the crowds attending the show are greater in number than were those who saw the cattle show at St. Louis last year, and that they take a greater interest in the animals.

And with the best of grace these same judges give to Oregon the palm for breeding the finest cattle and horses in the United States. Expressions of wonder and praise are heard on all sides as the splendid animals are led before the experts to be judged.

"Better blood and finer stock have never before been brought together," said one judge this morning, as he felt the flanks of a sleek Holstein bull, bred in Oregon.

"This show is a surprise to all of us," he continued, "because, although we knew that fine stock was bred in this state and the Pacific northwest, we had not the slightest idea that it was as fine as this. There really is no need for breeders to go east for their fine stock. You've got enough good blood right in this state to meet the best right requirements. Oregon and the northwest should be complimented."

Admiration for splendid horses. The judging this morning was confined to shorthorn herds and bulls, and to Jerseys and Holsteins of the same classes. But the admiration of the greater part of the people, and particularly of the women, goes to the magnificent horses. Hardly do the blooded favorites enter the ring than the women clap their hands. This sign of approbation is swelled by the cheering and stamping of the men.

The sun shone this morning on what probably was the most beautiful aggregation of horses yet seen in Oregon, or possibly in the country. Their satin coats, glistening and glossy, their broad, muscular, their mighty shoulders and their mightier flanks made a sight that will remain long in the minds of the thousands who saw them.

And the cattle, too, came in for their share of petting and admiration. Great passive bulls and cows and gentle, soft-eyed milk cows were lined up and their hides pinched and pulled and their flanks patted and slapped and their legs rubbed by the judges, who looked wise and never said a word. And when the prize ribbons were given out the groans of the cattle and horses blushed a deep red and looked conscious.

EAST MORRISON IMPROVEMENT

and that it was on account of the company's indisposition to interfere with the rush travel during the present summer.

Last summer many wanted the street filled and planked while the Morrison street bridge was in course of construction, but there were strenuous objections. The street was virtually closed during part of the time.

After the Morrison bridge was opened for traffic the trucks and drays and carriages resumed their travel along the highway and soon wore out the few sound planks that were left.

Street Was Nearly Closed. Charles Wanser, former city engineer, threatened to close the street to all traffic. He pronounced it unsafe and a constant menace to life.

The former city council had been importuned to replace the street, but nothing was done. A few weeks ago D. W. Taylor, the new city engineer, took up the matter and will soon have it in shape to push to completion.

The plan will be abandoned and the usual preliminaries will be gone through by the council. Probably the plan will be to fill one side of the street at a time, using the other side meanwhile.
