WEATHER REPORT.

The pressure has decreased rapidly in western Oregon and western Washington during the last 12 hours and a storm is approaching this district from the ocean. Southeast storm warnings were ordered displayed at the mouth of the Columbia river at 5:30 a. m., and at all other display stations in the district at 7:15 a. m., except at Aberdeen, where southwest warnings were displayed. Increasing southeast shifting to southwest winds are indicated for this afternoon and tonight, becoming strong breeze in the interior and strong gale along the coast.

Rain has occurred generally in northwestern Oregon and western Washington during the last 24 hours, while light, scattering showers and in some instances thunder storms are reported east of the Cascade mountains and in western Montana, northern Utah and northern Arizona. The indications are for rain in this district tonight and Tuesday; it will be warmer tonight east of the Cascade mountains.
