WEATHER REPORT.

The disturbance central yesterday morning over the middle western states has advanced northeastward and is now central over the lake region, where it has caused general rains. A second disturbance of quite decided character passed eastward over British Columbia during the last 24 hours, causing light rains in western Oregon and western Washington and a general rise in temperature throughout the Pacific northwest. It also caused fresh gales along the Washington coast, for which southwest storm warnings were displayed at 5:30 p. m. Thursday. At Tatoosh island a maximum velocity of 48 miles an hour from the south occurred, while at the mouth of the Columbia river the highest wind was 36 miles from the south.

It is expected that unsettled, showery weather will continue in western Oregon, Washington and northern Idaho tonight and Saturday with generally fair weather in eastern Oregon and southern Idaho. It will be cooler in all districts tonight.
