DRESS ACCESSORIES

Great Savings in the Buying of Laces

Every Woman Needs Ribbons and Shirtwaist Patterns for Less—First Floor

It is a great lace season. The winds of Fashion are all favorable to it. The luxuriously elegant period of the Empire, which sounds the dominant note for the full development of winter styles, was a great lace reign. Napoleon was an admirer of lace, and Josephine wore lace lavishly—she was the "Lace Empress."

Another reason—all through Europe during the past decade there has been a revival of the hand-made lace industries. In England and Ireland, under such well-known women as the Countess of Warwick, the Countess of Aberdeen and Mrs. Alice Hart. In Italy under Queen Margherita and the Countess Di Brazza, a one-time American girl. In Austria. And now in France—a league of French women of the highest social standing, conspicuously the rich and distinguished Duchesses d'Uzes, are pledged to encourage native laces. A great lace fete was held on the Terrace of the Tuilleries in early summer that was the objective point of all ultra-fashionable Paris. Laces were used profusely in the trousseaux of the two recent royal brides of Europe, Princess Margaret of Connaught and Cecile of Germany. At the New York Horse Show the past week the great lace winter season was foreshadowed by the profuse use of lace—on gowns and for gowns, and for ultra-fashionable lace coats. All of which emphasizes the great vogue of lace. Special this week in the "Lace Store."

"Givers of Best Values"

Are those stores that select staple, stylish merchandise that people want and reduce the price—or sell it for less than actual market worth—AT SUCH TIME AS FOLK NEED THE GOODS. This is the policy of the Olds, Wortman & King organization. It's only natural that advertising statements regarding the sacrifice of merchandise should incite more or less incredulity on the part of the public.

That merchants are not in business for their health is obvious, consequently it's no doubt rather hard to believe that they would deliberately select good, staple stuff for slaughter while they are still in style and season.

Yet if they could only come behind the scenes for a few moments, they would realize the necessity for such sacrifices at stated periods.

One of these times is now at hand. The more you buy in the great Thanksgiving Sales—the more you'll save.
