WEATHER REPORT.

The barometer has fallen rapidly in the extreme northwest and a storm is central over Alberta, which has caused snow in British Columbia, extreme northeast Washington and western Montana, and rain along the Washington coast. The severe storm yesterday over the Great Lakes has passed to sea down the St. Lawrence valley. It caused a marked rise in temperature in the Atlantic states and general rains, which, however, were not heavy. A third disturbance is central this morning over Minnesota, which is causing snow in that state and in upper Michigan. It is much cooler in the Ohio valley and lake region. The falling barometer in the north Pacific states indicates the approach of another disturbance from sea, which will cause rain or snow generally east of the Cascade mountains and rain in Western Oregon and western Washington during the next day or two. Storm warnings have been ordered at all seaports in western Washington for high southwest winds this afternoon.
