WEATHER REPORT.

Under the influence of an immense area of high pressure, which developed over the north Pacific states during the last 24 hours, fair and moderately cold weather now prevails in the states west of the Rocky mountains. This high pressure area will continue to control the weather in this district during the next two days and a continuation of the present weather may be expected tonight and Saturday.

The storm central in the lake region yesterday is moving slowly northeastward through the St. Lawrence valley, while the disturbance over Arizona has moved southeastward to the gulf of Mexico. As a result of these storms unsettled, rainy weather continues in the lower Mississippi valley, Texas, Oklahoma, the lake region, Ohio valley, middle Atlantic and New England states.
