Do You Want a Baby?

Somewhere in the tumult of this city there is a baby that wants you—needs you. There is not only one such, but there are many. There is also an easy way to find these little ones. Perhaps you never thought of it, but it is one of the many uses of a Journal "Want Ad." It is mentioned here merely as an illustration of how close these little want ads come, not only to the business life, but also the home life and hearts of men, women and children in this city.

There is probably no other place in which so many and varied human interests are brought together as in the want columns of The Journal. There are few people in Portland who have not been benefited directly or indirectly by these little ads. Aside from the more common uses of finding help and employment, buying, selling and renting, the little want ad has other functions. Many a wayward son or daughter, many an estranged husband or wife has been brought back to the home circle by a few words of forgiveness, warning or appeal in the personal column of The Journal. Families have been united after years of separation.

When death enters the home there is always one place in which the public announcement is made, and that is in The Journal.

Because of their novelty the want ad columns are always interesting as well as profitable reading. A Montavilla woman who has read The Journal for nearly four years did not discover until recently the Doll Repairing ad in the Personal Column. Her childrens' best loved dolls were in a forlorn condition, needing extensive repairs, and the want ad simplified the matter for her. Look over the want ads tonight yourself and see if you do not make some interesting discoveries.

Almost any kind of an exchange can be made through a want ad in The Journal. A baby carriage can be traded for a bicycle, a camera for a shotgun, lessons in French for board, paper-hanging for clothing, dancing lessons for dentistry, an oriental rug for a brass bed, a horse for a piano. If you would like to trade something you have for something you want, try it.

Another feature of The Journal want ads is that they are clean and reliable. The value of these ads to both the advertiser and the reader is thus greatly enhanced.
