Mystery Surrounding Death of F. G. Naylor of Athena Remains Unsolved.

NO ARRESTS MADE BY LOCAL AUTHORITIES

Remains of Wheatgrower Interred at Athena Today—Daughter Declares There Was No Trouble in the Family.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) Pendleton, Or., March 30.—F. G. Naylor of Athena, who was found dead in Evers' millrace in this city Sunday morning, was taken to his home yesterday, and buried in Athena today. He was a wealthy wheat grower, and well known all over Umatilla county.

Up to this time no evidence has been found connecting any one with the killing of Naylor, though some suspicion has been thrown upon his son-in-law, Ed Tracey, with whom Naylor had trouble and with whom he was seen during the evening.

At first it was taken for granted that Naylor had drowned, but when the autopsy showed otherwise, the matter of his death became a mystery, as it was shown that he came to his death by a blow in the afternoon and was to return in the evening. Later she came down town and saw her father and husband in one of the saloons. Her father was drunk. She declared that there had been no particular trouble between her husband and her father.

Tracey declares that his father-in-law tried to persuade his wife to go back to the ranch and live with him on the farm near Athena. He said he told him that he would have to do one of two things, stay away and stop making trouble in the family or he would quit and leave his wife. He declared that he spent Saturday night at his brother's home.

George Wilkinson, a young boy, says that he saw Naylor late Saturday night after he was seen with his son-in-law on Franklin street and he was drunk. County Sheriff Taylor and Deputy Joe Blakely have both been working on the case and up to this time have found no direct evidence against any one, and no arrests have yet been made.

The force of the explosion threw him 46 feet from the place where he was working and his body was horribly mangled. His head was blown off, one leg broken and a large hole torn in his side. The tamping bar, with which he was working, was found 20 feet beyond the body. The unfortunate man leaves a widow and several children.
