

FULTON'S VIEW OF STATEMENT ONE

Senator Does Not Think Majority Rule Holds Unless Choice is of Dominant Party.

THINKS ELECTION BY PEOPLE NOT BINDING

Favors Direct Primary Law When Legislature Elects Nominee of Political Party Having Majority in It.

(Washington Bureau of The Journal.)
Washington, D. C., April 8.—Senator Fulton, when questioned further today concerning his views on direct primary and statement No. 1 of the primary law, said:

"I favor direct primary and hope it will be continued, but it is my conviction that certain ways to destroy it for its friends to insist that thereafter the legislature of one political party may be required to elect a senator of a different party. As for statement No. 1, it is my conviction that when the people of Oregon adopted the direct primary law, they understood that United States senators were thereafter to be nominated by the people, and when the legislature should be elected, it would elect the nominee of the party having a majority in the legislature. The act itself, unfortunately, was not clearly analyzed during the campaign.

Carefully Worded.

"The main proposition was the nomination by party voters of their candidates. Little attention was given to the matter of electing a senator, for everybody knew under the constitution that that must still be done by the legislature. But it was thought that the nomination by party voters would be ratified by members of each party in the legislature.

"I have had forwarded to me recently a copy of the law and a pamphlet entitled 'An Argument for Statement No. 1,' which quotes from a folder which has been circulated among the voters during the campaign of 1924 and which contains this statement: 'The legislature will simply ratify the people's choice for senator in the same way the president is elected.'

"Now, the people will know that the candidate for president is first nominated and then the electors nominated and elected, and that electors 'ratify' people's choice by voting for the nominee of their party. Unquestionably, the voters of Oregon vote generally understood that such would be the action expected of the legislature. Were the presidential electors ever known to vote for the nominee of the opposite party? Those who are insisting that the legislature, a majority of which is of one political party, should elect a member of another political party to the senate, should he happen to have received more votes than some particular person of their own party, are insisting on that which will never be done.

May's Issue in Force.

"If there is one official who represents the political views of the party more than all others, it is the member of congress. It is asking and expecting too much to demand that the political party having succeeded in electing a majority of the legislature, will forego and renounce all political advantage of such victory, by electing a senator who will stand for the party in all things the very opposite of their political creed, simply because he happened to defeat at the polls some member of their party. They may properly construe that as an indication that voters of their party do not desire them to elect the defeated candidate. They will never assume that they were expected to abandon their political faith and elect essentially a political opponent.

"It is also a mistake to assume that there can be but one candidate of each party for the senate. The primary law is still in force, and one who desires may avail himself of its provisions to have his name placed on the ticket as a candidate for senator, without regard to the result at the primaries."

March Cleanup Is Good One.

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Forest Grove, Or., April 8.—A. A. Eade, superintendent of the Oregon Securities company, is down from the mine and brought with him the March cleanup. It is learned that it will amount to about $20,000 and is considered a good run. Much rich ore is being run through the mill now and much more is in sight. The tram from the Musk mine will be in operation soon and much rich ore will then be run.

LAND SWINDLERS TRIED FOR FRAUDS IN KANSAS

(Journal Special Service.)
Topeka, Kan., April 8.—The trial of several of the so-called land fraud cases is expected to make the term of the federal court, which opened in Topeka today, one of more than ordinary interest. The most important of these cases are for the term is that of John E. Bilby, Lewis C. Jenkins and James H. Drain. The three defendants are charged with subornation of perjury and conspiracy in connection with government land deals. The case was transferred to Topeka from Wichita. The other land cases on the docket for the term are mostly simple fencing cases.

MANUFACTURE OF ABSINTHE MAY BE PROHIBITED

Movement on Foot in Switzerland to Prevent Manufacture of Cordial.

(Journal Special Service.)
Washington, April 8.—The grave effects attributed to absinthe drinking may soon become extinct by reason of the action of the Swiss government. Nearly the entire quantity of absinthe imported into the United States is distilled in the canton of Neuchâtel, Switzerland. Virtually all that is imported goes to New York, New Orleans and San Francisco.

Because of the great evil resulting from the habit of using this drink, a movement is on foot in Switzerland to prohibit its production, and even forbid its sale within the republic. The manufacture or distillation of absinthe is a government monopoly in Switzerland. It is estimated the revenue to the government is about $1,000,000 a year from this source.

PROCTOR CELEBRATES HIS SILVER JUBILEE

(Journal Special Service.)
New York, April 8.—The present week marks the silver jubilee of F. F. Proctor as a New York theatrical manager. Mr. Proctor has arranged to celebrate the occasion by producing a different play every afternoon and evening during the week at the Fifth Avenue theatre, one of the several houses he controls in the metropolis. Mr. Proctor is one of the most widely known managers in America. He was born some 50-odd years ago in the village of Dexter, Maine, and his professional career as a manager began 30 years ago in Albany, where he acquired possession of a small theatre. He was the originator of high-class, popularized amusement, and at one time controlled a circuit of 21 theatres in the United States and Canada. He directed the first production in the metropolis to New York 25 years ago. He built the Twenty-third Street theatre after his own plans and made it a first-class house. It was here that both Charles Froberman and Edwin Booth made their first productions in the metropolis. Later Mr. Proctor turned his theatre into a vaudeville house and gave the first continuous performance in 1893.

OREGON PONIES SHIPPED TO CALIFORNIA RESORTS

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)
Pendleton, Or., April 8.—G. W. Shipley, the well-known Pasadena horse buyer, who has visited Pendleton several times in the past year for the purpose of buying-Umatilla Indian ponies for the California winter resorts, is arranging to ship a number of these ponies to the Sunnyside Shieland farm at Santa Barbara, California. Over 100 ponies have been sent out of Pendleton in the past several months, and they are a favorite class among the rich tourists and residents of the California winter resorts who train them for polo. He will select a number of spotted and odd colored ponies for the next shipment, and hopes to send out about 30 choice animals.

The REALM FEMININE

NATURE'S QUARTERLY.

There is an immense amount of pleasure to be gotten out of just one cherry tree in full bloom. If you are skeptical about it, sit down in an upper window hidden by one of these wonders—wonders none the less because they are so plentiful—and get into sympathy with it and you'll find a sense of rest and sweet satisfaction that comes from wordless communication with that tree, just as real as any pleasure you ever found in the society of a loved friend; for trees no less than animals have a personality and a consciousness of their own, different in kind, no doubt, very greatly from ours, though the more we associate with them the more understandable do they become.

You may not be able to see how far the roots have stretched down into the earth nor how the bole has grown in the year, but if you look up at the tip top you will be able to measure the added height of the tree in the tender new shoots that cannot yet be intrusted with the business of blooming and bearing fruit.

There they stand, sometimes a foot or more above the bloom level with only the delicate green leaves upon them, reaching up and ever upward toward their god, the sun.

But as you begin to find a new world of beauty in that mass of intersecting heights bearing the fair white promise of coming fruit, you observe they serve another purpose—the bees are plying their trade busily among the blossoms. Doubtless they are quite as confident of their trees as we are expressly for them as we are that the "lower animals" exist for our convenience. A very pardonable error on their part since they find the one thing which is lacking in their prodigal abundance in its branches.

How businesslike these little laborers are, and with what contempt they must look upon the great, blundering yellow-headed bumblebee. It takes him about twice as long to burglarize one blossom as it does the honey-bee and the stems sway tremulously under his weight.

Then another tiny marauder comes to divide the spoil with the bees—the humming bird. Is there in all the world so dainty, so wonderful an embodiment of the great mystery we call life, as this?

With incredible swiftness his bill drains a cup of honey, while with that motion and whirl of wings from which cherry trees were made expressly for him he is perching in perfect repose upon a limb where you can admire him.

How beautiful he is! As he turns his head you get the gleam of that neck-band that is more radiant than the flash of jewels. Imagine the also of one of those "beetles" that are so common to a vanishing point like a fine needle.

A sparrow comes and sits beside him. He looks like a big, ruffianly tramp of a bird compared with this bit of feathered daintiness.

A sleek, saucy robin next suffers by comparison, looking, as he is, the self-confident plutocrat of birddom—deftly clumsy and earthy when measured by the standard of making tiny, avic creature fed on honey and at home in the air.

How grateful you are to him for those two short minutes in which he condenses the existence of which was due to the existence of what was admired. It is something he rarely does.

ARE WOMEN CRUEL?

Speaking of birds reminds one of the old question, Are women cruel? A man writer of a late novel says of his heroine: "As she came down the steps she was a thing of beauty and a joy forever. She wore one of those jackets to which several gray-squirrel families had contributed their hides, a hat the existence of which was due to the negligence of a certain rare bird, and many silkworms had spun the fabric of her gown."

WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of '73" Caused It to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose maiden name was Estes, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819, coming from a good old Quaker family. For some years she taught school, and became known as a woman of an alert restore the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which was so good for their woman friends and neighbors was equally good for the women of the whole world.

The Pinkhams had no money, and little credit. Their first laboratory was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were steeped, and the results gradually filling a gross of bottles. Then came the question of selling it, for always before they had given it away freely. They hired a job printer to run off some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and these were distributed by the Pinkham sons in Boston, New York, and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, to a great extent, advertised, for where used it recommended to others, and the demand gradually increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and from that time the growth and success of the enterprise were assured, until today Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham herself did not live to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study, and the details, including symptoms, treatment, and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day these records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's ills, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her hard-won knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when the first Lydia B. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now the mother of a large family, took it up. With womanly assignments, somewhat capable as herself, the present Mrs. Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the office of no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for Health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

and investigating mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.

In 1848 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs, nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of them gained a wonderful knowledge of the curative properties of the various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took a great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provides in the harvest-like the various vegetables, fruits of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them, in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies expressly designed to cure the various ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search these out, and prepare simple and effective medicines for her own family and friends.

Chief of these was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found best adapted for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured it and became quite popular among them.

All this so far was done freely, without money and without price, as a labor of love. But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the large real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from the panic. Lydia E. Pinkham's income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world. The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to day. So far as the public was concerned, the day passed without observation, the only recognition of the anniversary being a closing of the government offices and the display of flags on public buildings.

Despite the unsavory repute of the king because of his financial transactions and his moral shortcomings, every one, both within and without his domain, gives him credit for his abilities as an executive and a diplomat and for his tireless energy. At three-score and ten King Leopold remains active as he was at 50. He has retained his health and an amount of youthful vigor and energy quite remarkable for a man of his age. The somewhat unusual arrangement of his every-day life—being an almost equal intermingling of physical exercise and intellectual labor—suits the king because he works rapidly and makes prompt decisions. This, added to his encyclopedic range of knowledge, enables him to perform in two hours an amount of work that the employes of his household, as they themselves acknowledge, would take a day to accomplish.

JUDGE MOSES HALLETT FORTY YEARS ON BENCH

(Journal Special Service.)
Denver, Col., April 8.—Today marked the fortieth year of Judge Moses Hallett's service on the bench of the United States circuit court of Colorado, and he was the recipient of many congratulations. A rumor has been in circulation that Judge Hallett was about to retire from the bench, but this is denied by the judge himself.
