

SIGHT BY AID OF RABBIT'S EYE

Partial Success Crowns Attempt of Surgeons to Restore Vision of Blind Man.

CORONA OF BUNNIE'S EYE GRAFTED UPON PATIENT

Can Distinguish Light From Darkness and Condition Is Rapidly Improving—Membrane From Animal Is Used.

(Journal Special Service.)

Washington, April 10.—Partial success has attended the effort of surgeons to restore sight to Wilton Heineard by grafting the membrane and cornea of a rabbit's eyes to his. He can now distinguish between daylight and darkness.

Heineard was operated upon two months ago. He has undergone several minor operations since and when the bandages were removed from his eyes he could see faintly. The surgeons have maintained the greatest secrecy as to the result of the operations but declared themselves satisfied. They claim if Heineard's sight continues to get stronger as rapidly as it has done in the past week he will soon be able to walk without the aid of an attendant. They do not hope he will ever be able to read again.

Heineard lost his sight more than a year ago through a negro highwayman throwing the contents of a can of kerosene into his face. The membrane which surrounds and lubricates the eyes was eaten away by the kerosene and the eyelids grew fast to the eyeballs. Involuntary twitching of the eyelids caused him the greatest pain.

Surgeons first operated on the eyelids and to the insides of them grafted the mucous membrane of the eyes of a rabbit. This was a distinct success and afforded him much relief.

The next operation was to graft the transparent membrane of the rabbit's eyeball to Heineard's eyes. An attempt was made to put in place the cornea of a rabbit's eye but this was not successful and the operation was repeated and only the transparent membrane used.

COFFIN THROWN INTO STREET IN RUNAWAY

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Vancouver, Wash., April 10.—Charles Goodwin, John Jensen and two other men, residing near Salmon creek, yesterday were thrown from a wagon in a runaway accident on Main street. The men were taking to Salmon creek a coffin for the burial of the late Charles Goddard, a prominent prohibition worker who died there Sunday. When their team ran away the wagon was overturned. None of the men was hurt, but the coffin was damaged. Jensen was arrested and fined $12.50, as it is alleged that reckless driving caused the runaway.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS IN SESSION AT ALBANY

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Albany, Or., April 10.—The Presbytery of Oregon of the United Presbyterian church met in this city last evening. Today the Woman's Missionary society of the same church met and in the evening a special missionary sermon will be preached by Rev. Mr. De Bois of Portland. This society has a part in supporting a special missionary in India, one that is sent from the coast and supported by the ladies' society of that church.

WOMAN DOCTOR SPEAKS TO MEDICAL CONGRESS

(Journal Special Service.)

Lisbon, Portugal, April 10.—The session of the International Medical congress was opened here today. The attendance is unusually large and every civilized country of the world is represented by delegates. Among them are many of the most noted authorities in various branches of medical science. Among the matters to be discussed by the congress will be the case of the lawyer Patrick, who is charged with having murdered William M. Rice, one of his clients. For the first time in the history of the International Medical congress a woman physician, Dr. Jennie McCowan of Davenport, Iowa, will deliver an address.

Like a Well-Drilled Army

Our working organization is simply perfect.

We have two expert cutters, a shop foreman, who knows his business like a book, and a force of journeyman tailors working together like a clock.

We deliver suits promptly and in excellent condition. All the saving and economy that comes of having a large, well drilled workshop we put into the clothes.

Just size up one of our made-to-measure suits for $25 or $30 alongside garments made up by the high priced fellows costing one third more. The Columbia Woolen Mills Co. invites comparison.

Suits to your measure $20 to $40.

THROUGH THE LINES.

Icebound, alone, besieged by winter's snows,
The far horizon cold and black with grief,
Comes there no message from the serried rows
Of springtime forces bringing me relief?

When, just within the shadow of my goal,
These suddenly springs forth a violet,
Frail as the mist, eye, as the zephyr frail
To bid my spirit hope, and woes forget.

"The messenger of spring am I," it cries,
"I bring you gladness news to light the day,
Take courage, friend, and let your spirit rise—
The armies of the spring are on the way."

"Thy rescue from the winter comes at noon,
Thy speedy freedom—all is soon to be—
The legions of the Vernal Queen are massed,
And hastening by land and by the sea."

And as he speaks this soldier of his Queen,
Caucasus by the Frosty Guards that hold me there
In calmness meets his fate, with smiling mien,
His duty done and knowing no despair.

What nobler mission hath the world indeed
Than this, which, when the soul doth bleed
Brings through the muck a loving word of heed
And makes the darkened spirit glad with hope?"

DRINK AMONG WOMEN.

The ease and rapidity with which women belonging to the non-producing classes are adopting the practices of men in the same class are remarkable. If they continue to acquire momentum at the present rate for any length of time the results will be sufficiently disastrous to awaken our prophets from evil from their slumbers.

News from New York under date of March 30 makes mention of three women, all of them well to do, who were found suffering from drink. One of these lives in a fashionable hotel and can write her check for thousands. Another lives in a high-class apartment hotel and was able to go to the police court in a carriage. The third pleaded that bridge what had brought her to drink.

A woman who gave the fictitious name of "Mary Ellen" was found staggering on Eighth avenue with two valuable dogs in leash pulling her about the streets. She was taken to the West Forty-seventh street station, where, after giving the dogs costly lace handkerchiefs to chew, insisted that they be sent to her cell with her.

A doctor of West fifty-seventh street balled her out and declared it would be criminal to give her name under the circumstances. He averred that she was a woman very well known in society.

Later she drove the side court in her carriage and was severely lectured by the magistrate. She begged to be discharged because her husband would disown her if he knew of her disgrace. It is hardly to be supposed she would have contemplated disowning him had he been guilty of a like lapse from sobriety.

A woman calling herself Beatrice Morton, fashionably dressed, was later brought into the west side court charged with intoxication. She had been staggering on the steps of St. Raphael's church at Fortieth street and Tenth avenue.

This is her testimony: "For three weeks I have been playing bridge what every afternoon. You haven't the least idea how much whiskey and wine women drink at these gatherings. The spirit of gambling is in the air and it takes strong drink to calm the nerves. I left my friend's house and thought I was going to my carriage, which was waiting for me. I became lost and went into the church to prevent meeting some one who might know me on the street. It would ruin me if my address were known."

The working woman has her troubles and the business woman her responsibilities, but they are safe from the temptations that beset the idle woman with nothing to do and find self-diversion.

Along with gambling and drinking we are not surprised to find smoking. Newton Newkirk, a writer in the Boston Post, thus discourses on the tobacco habit among women:

A real countess, the wife of a prominent physician, also the daughter of a university professor, all of Chicago, have been asked what they think of women smoking. All three are reported to have said that they consider it a woman's privilege to smoke if she desires, and that the woman who smokes is not necessarily any worse than the woman who does not.

The idea of women smoking has been weighing on our minds of late. Somehow or other we cannot get used to the picture. It may be a woman's privilege to smoke. We believe in women's rights—and wrongs—and wrongs, yet our sense of propriety is shocked when we sit down and try to picture a beautiful woman with a pipe in her mouth, or a cigar, or even a cigarette.

Fancy a fashionable drawing-room function approaching you with a cigar which has gone out, and saying, "Pardon me, but have you a match?"

Imagine sitting down, you husband, to read the evening paper after dinner in the sanctity of your own home—imagine your wife sitting with her fancy work across the table from you—imagine her filling up her meerschaum and sitting there puffing away as she pleases her need! Imagine her being such a connoisseur of the weed that when you leave home in the morning she would say to you, "And Ned, bring me home a box of perfectos, medium strength. I didn't like that last box you brought me—they smoked like ropes."

Imagine seeing on trains, steamers and in railway stations such labels as "Ladies' Smoking Room," "Women's Smoking Compartment," "Women's Room, for Women Only."

Imagine a placard hanging up in the ladies' smoking compartment of a Pullman which reads: "Ladies who are not smoking will please not occupy seats in this compartment to the exclusion of ladies wishing to smoke"—and imagine the ladies who are not smoking living up to it!

Imagine all men becoming so disgusted with seeing women smoking that they stop smoking themselves, and then imagine such a reading notice as this in public places: "Ladies Will Please,

Did you get any of this?

The March dividend of $2.25 per share was paid to all the holders of the J. C. Lee Co.'s stock on the first day of April

HERE'S SOME THAT DID:

Independence, Or., April 3, 1906.—The J. C. Lee Co., Salem, Or.—Gentlemen: I have just received your check for the monthly dividend on my J. C. Lee Co. stock. To say I am well satisfied with my investment, I could not express my feelings otherwise but that you may in the future, as well as in the past, prosper in the great mining industry in which you are engaged to the highest of your anticipations for the good of yourself and all your clients and friends. Very respectfully yours,
H. H. JASPERSON,
Undertaker.

Monmouth, Or., April 4, 1906.—The J. C. Lee Co., Salem, Or.—Gentlemen: We, the undersigned stockholders in the J. C. Lee Co., such as to acknowledge receipt of your check for $2.25 in payment of March dividend on one share of J. C. Lee Co. stock, and note with pleasure what you say in regard to investing of surplus funds, which we trust will prove a wise investment and help to increase the dividends of the J. C. Lee stock.

We are well pleased with the monthly dividends received so far, and will confidently look for larger returns as soon as the various properties you are operating begin to produce.

If you will pardon a suggestion, we would suggest a strict conservatism as to investing the surplus funds. A good surplus in the treasury of any company is in our judgment a wise provision against any contingency that might arise. Thanking you for your promptness in sending our dividend checks, we are yours truly,
S. M. DANIEL,
Dry Goods.
J. H. HAWLEY,
Pres. Polk Co. Bank.
F. Y. MULKEY,
Capitalist.

Salem, Or., April 4, 1906.—The J. C. Lee Company, Salem: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your monthly dividend for March on J. C. Lee Co. stock. Your statement certainly looks good to me and the amount of the dividend is just a little better than anything else I have is bringing me. Wishing you all manner of success, I am yours truly,
JULIUS NELSON.

Portland, Or., April 4, 1906.—J. C. Lee Co., Salem, Or.—Dear Sirs: Your letter of the first containing dividend No. 3 just at hand. Your management of the J. C. Lee Co. is certainly wise and conservative, and I am pleased to give it my hearty endorsement.

In these days of rotten corporations and extravagant management, a company like yours, making good every promise and doing all you agree and more, is worthy of encouragement.

I note that you are opening offices in the east, to keep pace with the increasing demands for your securities. I can't but predict a bright future for the company, as your spirit is progressive and your generous dividends must soon convince the most timid investors of your ability to carry all you undertake to a successful issue.

I have a number of friends who expect to add their names to your subscription list within a very short time. Yours very truly,
B. C. ELY.

Perrydale, Or., April 4, 1906.—The J. C. Lee Co.—Dear Sirs: This is to acknowledge the receipt of your dividend check No. 566 of $2.25 for share on J. C. Lee Co. stock, this being the third consecutive monthly dividend on the stock, and according to the financial statement accompanying this dividend, you certainly will be able to continue and even increase the dividend in time. You people seem to be filling a long-felt want in the way of providing a legitimate mining bureau. Yours truly,
D. L. KEYT.

OUR OBJECT FOR SELLING THIS STOCK

We are asked every day why we offer this stock for sale when it is paying a dividend of more than 2 per cent monthly. We are determined to build up the largest brokerage business in the west, having already established permanent offices in many of the eastern cities.

It is often necessary, in offering stock for sale in the properties we are financing, that we be able to furnish as references, the names of responsible business men not only at home but in their own communities.

With this object in view, we placed 100 shares of this stock upon the market and give with each share as a premium 400 shares of stock in companies that we have financed.

Realizing that if the holder of these stocks is receiving his dividends regularly that he would recommend The J. C. Lee Company and their methods of doing business to all who inquired.

REMEMBER

That in buying this stock you are protected by actual cash assets of more than $2.00 for every $1.00 invested. The J. C. Lee Company's statement to R. G. Dunn & Co., made recently, shows their assets above all liabilities to be in excess of $100,000.00.

Not Smoke in the Presence of Gentlemen!

"Wouldn't it be a fierce state of affairs, what a burning shame!"

But notwithstanding this rather discouraging picture there are women by the thousand doing noble work in the world, using their fine energies—not in bridge what, nor burning them up in whiskey and tobacco—but in good work, many of them in original work, laying out fields of labor in hitherto untrodden ways. The extract that follows is one of the encouraging signs of the times and more than offsets the dark picture of the foolish, idle woman, following in the footsteps of the foolish, idle man.

The widow of Richard P. Bland—the "Silver Dick" of the 18-to-1 era and the man who, but for the spectacular appearance of Bryan in his "cross of gold and crown of thorns" act, would probably have been the Democratic nominee in 1896—is carrying on in Missouri a work of real beneficence. She is opening up to the people of her state the splendid possibilities of an 80-acre farm. Without other resources, from that little area she derives a handsome income, which enables her to maintain two establishments, one in St. Louis, and the other on her farm. She has studied the science

Her farm is divided into sections. One of these is devoted to a large orchard, the ground of which is fertilized by "ploughing under" crops of cowpeas, etc. Another section is given to small fruits; another to garden truck; others to timothy, clover, corn, oats and wheat in a scientific rotation. She has a method of her own of sowing bonemeal at the same time with wheat, and just before harvesting, sowing the same land with clover, which is later turned under. Her fruit trees and vines are regularly sprayed, she attending to the mixing of the solution herself. From her two acres of strawberries, long rows of small fruits, heavily laden orchard, vegetable garden and hay and grainfields, she gathers crops which are the envy of all her neighbors, and which she markets in St. Louis at the highest prices. When in the city she directs by telephone the operations of her farm near Lebanon; when on the farm she deals with city purchasers through the same instrument. Mrs. Bland is making four or five times as much money off that 80 acres as the average farmer makes off 100 or 150. In fact, she is demonstrating that almost any farmer is better off if he concentrates his time and expenditures on a small area. The example she sets adds another to many which demonstrate that the government, in continuing its free allotment of 160 acres to every homesteader, goes far beyond the bounds of a wise liberality. Better cut that allotment in two.
