free ourselves; help can never come from without. So if you will go through the plays you will find a number of people, all with diseased wills, lost to themselves, virtual slaves, and helping to create a false and immoral society, a society of hypocrisy and sin.

Here is where the more obvious of Ibsen's teachings come to the surface. His attacks on ethical and social conditions, which have stirred up all the enmity against him, hypocrisy in his regard being noble, the hypocrisy which masks under the name of convention and religion and romance and idealism, and above all that hypocrisy which comes from the convention of silence and which amounts to a universal conspiracy.

Truth is the Norwegian's Cry.

It is such things that are eating away vitality from life and making it meaningless. We have grown petty, we have ceased or have become afraid to think and have grown selfish without effecting any selfless. A true and decent society cannot be founded upon such lying principles—cannot be founded upon the tacit agreement of letting well enough alone.

Chicago Conservatory.

The Chicago conservatory, Auditorium building, Chicago, Illinois, announces a free summer teachers' normal of five weeks' duration, beginning June 24, that ought to be of great interest to music and elocution teachers of this vicinity.

Beginnings with the matinee tomorrow afternoon.

The Lyric will institute its customary change of bill by introducing the charming melodrama, "Brought to Justice." This attraction embraces all the elements which go to make a melodramatic production most interesting.

OSCAR WILDE: THE CURTAIN FALLS

By Jules Eckert Goodman.

From "The Journal's Own Correspondent." Oscar Wilde, says Boig, the great formless man, who blocks the way of Peer Gynt.

With the death of Henrik Ibsen there went from the world one of the most powerful literary figures of the nineteenth century, a writer whose influence has extended far and had been of the gravest import.

His Fame Secure.

It is too early even yet to estimate with any exactitude the extent of Ibsen's contribution. Certain factors, however, have long been seen and their values marked. There can be little doubt that he has firmly stamped his name upon his century.

ON THE STAGE

take her money, but if the history of her deeds were known it would be found that several poor children have been and are being educated by her; that others have been cared for in hospitals at her expense, and that homes of poverty have been permanently lightened by her generosity.

"When We Were Twenty-One."

"When We Were Twenty-One," that beautiful play of Henry W. Esmond's, is to be the bill for the sixth week of the Baker stock company, opening at the regular Sunday matinee, June 17.

VAUDEVILLE AND STOCK.

At the Grand.

Never has the Grand offered so many feature acts as will be assembled on the program for this week, which begins tomorrow afternoon. It is replete with headlines, and the bill is the strongest ever offered in a vaudeville house for the money.

Famous Quartet at Pantages.

The announcement that the Technau Quartet is coming back to the Pantages for a week's engagement will be doubly welcome to all theatre-goers and especially to lovers of good music.

Doctrine of the Will.

Thus in these two epics you see clearly the foundation stones of his doctrine of the will, that one doctrine which he has made central, he has made almost in every word of his writing and in the promulgation of which he was accused of all sorts of absurdities, while the main current of his teachings was unshaken and unrescued. This is the penalty of greatness; thus to be forever tripped up upon some petty technicality, while the big moments and events are overlooked and misinterpreted.

Will Against Heredity.

That essential struggle, without which there can be no drama, takes Ibsen a new turn, under such conditions. Instead of the mere petty struggle between what are after all external forces of little value, there is in his plays the inner struggle, the struggle which will against heredity, the struggle of the different selves which go to make up self.

Don go to the vaudeville shows.

Don go to the vaudeville shows, went to see this feature not once but many times and the reception of these singers every evening amounted to an ovation. Upon the occasion of their second visit they will present a new program including a major part of the opera "Martha" in costume. The personnel of the quartet is the same as when here before with the exception that Miss Eleanor Jenkins appears as soprano.

"Hotel Flim-Flam."

At the house of mirth, the Star stock company will put on another of its absurdly comical musical farces this week, "Hotel Flim-Flam," the engaging work of the vaudeville master, tells a great deal. The plot, or what there is of a plot, relates the adventures of the guests at a popular resort, where they are unboomed by confidence men at every turn.

At the Lyric.

With continuous performance, beginning at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, the engagement of the pretty melodrama, "A Convict's Wife," will be closed. This play has met with phenomenal success during the past week and this last opportunity to see this production will, no doubt be improved by a large number of the lovers of the drama.

Time's Nearly Up.

In a very few days Ellers' Piano House will be a memory of the past. The meantime we must sell the remaining large and almost complete assortment of fine pianos, pianolas, organs, etc. We've simply got to get rid of everything. Come in and make your own terms. Stores open this evening until after 10.
