HENDRICKS TAKES STAND TO DENY CHARGES MADE AGAINST HIM

Declares He Refused to Make Contracts in Advance With Homesteaders.

TRIES TO EXPLAIN DEALINGS WITH HAWK

Says He Carefully Performed His Duties as United States Commissioner in Every Case Taken Before Him for Action.

According to government witnesses, Hamilton H. Hendricks, former United States commissioner, counseled perjury, contracted in advance of filing to buy homestead claims as soon as final proof was made, shut his eyes to violation of the land laws and was the moving spirit in the conspiracy of the Butte Creek Land, Livestock & Lumber company to inclose a big tract of government land. According to his own story, Hamilton H. Hendricks is a most holy man, who not only never did any of the things charged to him, but was horrified to learn that one George W. Hawk had deceived him as to the value of the improvements on a homestead claim.

Hendricks took the stand in his own behalf this morning, settled himself comfortably in the chair with his left leg thrown over the right, swung round and, holding that left leg tightly with his right hand, talked direct to the jury. His answers were given rapidly and in detail, "Never did" and "I did not" being invariably followed by long explanations.

In beginning, Hendricks said that he had lived at Fossil 20 years, going there as a school teacher. He acquired an interest in a sawmill and out of this venture grew the Butte Creek Land, Livestock & Lumber company. Following these preliminaries came the first denial.

Many Denials.

The witness declared that he had refused to make contracts in advance with homesteaders. The farthest he had gone was to tell Henry Johnson that the company might buy his land after he had proved up. As for the H. B. Brown case, Hendricks said that he had never seen Clarence B. Zachary, manager of the company's ranch, and that his continuous residence on his claim was limited to two weeks spent in working on it as an employee of the company.

Stockmen Testify.

Among the witnesses put on yesterday afternoon by the government were James Loren Combs and Rufus King, stockmen, who testified that the Butte Creek company would not permit the government to graze on the government land included in the big inclosure.

J. H. Alexander, a special agent of the land office, told of a trip around the inclosure in January, 1905. His presence became known too soon to suit his purpose, and at several places he found the barbed wire freshly cut and rolled to one side, leaving a large opening.

Francis J. Heney then took the stand and testified to proceedings of the grand jury that investigated the methods of the Butte Creek company. He said that some indictments voted were not drawn because of lack of time. Such was the John Roll case, involving the charge of conspiracy on the part of officials of the company to defraud the government out of lands. The witness produced three letters written to him by Hendricks while the grand jury investigation was in progress. In these letters Hendricks denies, denies, and denies again that he had knowledge of government land being inclosed by his company.

MAYS' TRIAL DELAYED.

Two of Three Cases Will Proceed Tomorrow at Seaside.

The trial of State Senator E. P. Mays for land fraud conspiracy in connection with what is known as the Blue Mountain reserve case will not come up next Monday, the day set for hearing. Special Assistant Attorney-General Heney announced this morning that at least two, possibly three, cases will precede the Mays case, and that the latter will not be reached before August 13. Senator Mays is at the seaside gathering strength for his ordeal.

STOR MAYS IS AT THE SEASIDE GATHERING STRENGTH FOR HIS ORDEAL.

JURORS NOT SERVING IN THE HENDRICKS CASE WERE INSTRUCTED BY JUDGE HUNT THIS MORNING TO APPEAR AGAIN NEXT MONDAY.

It is expected that the trial of the Watson case will begin on that date.

CAR DID IT

child could have been seen at nearly as great a distance as in the middle of the day.

Victim Horribly Bruised.

Dr. C. T. Croddy was called to attend the child. He found to his surprise that no bones were broken. The head and body, however, were both horribly bruised, and the doctor stated today that it is doubtful if the child will live.

B. F. Boynton, the claim agent of the Portland Railway, Light & Power company, stated today that he had no evidence of the child having been struck by a car.

"We feel that it must have been struck by an automobile or other vehicle," said he. "The mother told our representative that the child was picked up in the middle of the track, and if struck by a car the child would have been mangled to pieces."

Car 2 on the Woodlawn line is the one which is supposed to have struck the babe. This car passed the Klidow residence southbound at 8:01 p. m. The motorist, C. M. Cason, states that it was perfectly light and that he could not have missed seeing the child if it had been on the track. He is sure his car did not strike little Emma.

PLAN TO STEAL

employees would have been paid for the month had the warrants for their salaries been signed. But the rush of committee business yesterday prevented Mayor Lane from completing this work and as a consequence nearly $4,000 was in the office when it was locked up for the night.

As a matter of fact any crackman who can get any money out of the treasurer's office is a fool.

Electrical safeguards make a complete circuit of the office and any attempt to enter means that he who monkey with the buzz-saw gets a shock of 500 volts. The Marsh system, invented for entry banks, is in operation, and it has been improved upon in several ways for the benefit of the office here.

Ordinarily there is little money in the office and the electrical circuit is not completed. But last night it was there with every volt and the men who cleaned up the room were careful not to touch the charged fixtures.

This morning City Treasurer Werlein was counting a huge pile of glittering double eagles heaped on a table, as he looked inviting. He piled $10,000 on a small tray and there was more than that left.

"It would be a hard matter to get in here if you didn't know the ropes," he said, as he explained the workings of the electrical safeguard system.

Realizing that a bold daylight robbery is just as likely to be attempted as an attack in the early morning hours when everything is locked up, every man in the department was on his guard.

By this evening the amount of money in the care of the treasurer will be much reduced.

CARTOONIST'S FATHER IS EIGHTY YEARS OLD

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Silverton, Or., Aug. 2.—On Monday evening, July 30, a party of friends and neighbors gathered at the beautiful home of Hon. T. W. Davenport in this city to commemorate the eightieth anniversary of his birth. Always interesting and entertaining, Mr. Davenport seemed exceptionally so upon this occasion and a more pleasant party has not been held in Silverton for years.

Hon. T. W. Davenport is the head of a family which in the present generation, claims Homer C. Davenport, one of the world's most famous cartoonists, as a gifted representative. Mr. Davenport is one of the most erudite scholars of the west, a prolific writer on educational and scientific topics, a physician, lawyer, civil engineer and ex-member of the Oregon legislature.

He was born on a farm in Columbia county, New York, July 30, 1854, and claimed that section of the country as his home until the fall of 1881, when he landed in Oregon, where he has since lived and most of the time in and near Silverton. He is responsible for much of the development of this country and has been among the most successful farmers of Marion county. Probably no man in Oregon has better trained mental faculties and a more apprehensive knowledge of current topics of the day. He is a frequent contributor to many of the leading periodicals of the east and his articles always contain food for the mind. He is a living exemplification of the greatest truth that years alone do not constitute old age.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR FAIR AT SALEM

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.)

Salem, Or., Aug. 2.—The state board of agriculture is enthusiastic over the prospects for a big state fair, and they have reason to believe for there is much interest manifested in the enterprise. Five counties have reserved space in the exhibit pavilion, and several are in correspondence for the closing of contracts. The counties that have already secured space in the exhibit pavilion are Benton, Jackson, Linn, Marion and Lane. The concessions, too, are being freely taken up, and the space is almost entirely sold. Among the amusement features that have been secured is a carnival troupe, a merry-go-round, and the prospects are favorable for an airship.

President Downing believes it will be the greatest fair in the history of the state, and announced yesterday that Mrs. Charles H. Hinges, Salem's sweet soprano, had been engaged to sing. The Rose City quartet of Portland is another musical organization that has been secured, and the charming little impersonator, Emily Lindsay-Squier, has also been engaged for the occasion.
