In command of Captain M. Bendegard the steamer Redondo arrived in the harbor early this morning from San Francisco via Coos Bay. This is her first visit, here since she was sold by Swayne & Hoyt to the Simpson Lumber company, and her arrivel was somewhat of a surprise as it was thought that the transfer would mean her going on another route. It was stated this morning, however, by officers of the steamer that she will probably ply mostly on the Portland run.

MARTIN DANIELSON DOES NOT BELIEVE IN THE DEW CURE NOW

For years Martin Danielson had read with avidity the exchings of Father Kneipp, the expounder of the wet grass cure as a panacea for all ills, but had never been a believer in the efficacy of the treatment until the recent press dispatches conveying the information that Rockefeller, the pater of Standard Oll, had become a devotee of the system. The glowing accounts of how "Olly John" was wont to leave his couch in the early hours of the morning, when the grass was still wet with dew, and sprint fawn-like across the lawn, his little uncovered tootsies mingling with the daisies and the clover, aroused a longing in the breast of Danielson to do likewise.

The opportunity presented itself at 2 o'clock this morning, when Martin, upon returning to his abode after a night of merriment with bibulous companions, found that the merry-go-round motion of his bed was not conducive to slumber. He then determined to give the Rneipp cure a thorough test for insomnia and accordingly started out on the street with the intention of going to the park blocks.

WHAT NAUGHTY MAN STOLE THESE PRETTY GIRL BATHERS' CLOTHES?

A party of picnickers came near being marooned on the mainland down at Willamette slough yesterday afternoon because while the girls of the party were in bathing some unknown persons stole along and carried off their hats and wraps. Consternation reigned when the bathers discovered that they would have to return to the city minus considerable of their clothing, but a systematic search failed to reveal any plausible clue to the disappearance of the missing wearing apparel. The report was brought to the city by Captain Amos of the launch Eva, who, upon learning that there was trouble ashore, stopped to investigate. The Eva was returned from a cruise down the river. Of course the skipper was sworn to secrecy, but for once he failed to keep the promise.

The pionickers laft Portland on a launch early in the morning with the investigate of the steamer and the discharging her day on the beautiful and verdant lowlands of the slough, and many took their bathing subt along. They had a fine time swimming about in the warm and shallow water and stayed in for quite a while, never dreaming that in the meanting that the release of the missing watering behind the clump of willows skirting the little lagoon.

By swapping clothes the unfortunate ones finally succeeded in securing enough covering to remove their bathing suits and shield themselves from the cooling breeze that always sweeps up the river after nightfall.

The popular belief is that tramps stole the missing articles, but no one seems to know what use they could have for them unless they intend establishing a notion or department store down the country.

WHOLE OF SAD STORY NEVER TOLD, HE SAYS

People Are Disheartened, Only Few Permanent Buildings Are Being Erected and Banks Do Busines Under Great Difficulties.

"San Francisco is doomed. The very heart of the city is gone and the people will never be able to overcome the disaster."

Thus spoke J. S. Gordon, who recently resigned his position as vice-president and managing editor of the Syracuse, New York, Herald, at the Portland hotel this morning after a visit at San Francisco.

New York Herald, at the Portland hotei this morning after a visit at San Francisco.

"Not one tenth of the disaster has been told by the eastern papers. I would not have come to the coast this year had it not have been to see the effects of the earthquake and fire. Now that I have seen them I almost regret that I made the trip.

"There is no building going on in the stricken city, at least nothing permanent, with the exception of five or six structures. The banks are not open for business. It is impossible for them to transact business. Around the buildings are piles of debris over which one must climb to enter the banks. I was standing 200 feet away from the entrance of one of the banking-houses and was confronted by a pile of bricks that extended from my position to the very doors of the building. I asked a policeman if the bank was open and if there was a way by which I could enter it. He told me that if I cared to climb over the bricks I could transact my business. The pile was nearly two stories high. All the business done by the San Francisco banks is carried on by mail.

Feople are disheartened.

"The people are disheartened and they well may be. The dust and ashes are ankle deep and fly about in clouds with the least wind. I stopped at the St. Francis, which is nothing but a mass of ruins, but at the temporary wooden structure across the street. In the basement of the old building they have started a restaurant in which the guests of the one-story building are supposed to be annexed. I went there for breakfast one morning and although the waiter brushed the table quite neatly when I sat down I was able to write my initials in the dust and ashes that gathered by the time my meal was served.

"These are only a few illustrations of the conditions existing in the stricken city, and I believe that it will never be rebuilt to its former importance. I have witnessed all the great fires in this country, including those in Chicago, Baltimore and Boston, but I must say that none appalled me as did the one at San Francisco. The city is nothing but a deserted ash-strewn mass of ruins, incapable of rebuilding itself and dependent upon eastern money. Unless the latter goes to San Francisco's aid, and eastern money is very calloused, the Bay City will never resume her position."

Mr. Gordon is accompanied by Mrs. Gordon and they will leave today for the east, stopping at points of interest along the route.

With a record of over fifty, under five years of age, out of every hundred deaths, it was the AMBITION OF EVERY PHYSICIAN to discover a remedy suitable for the ailments of infants and children that would decrease this distressing mortality. In Castoria that relief has been found.
