THRONE OF DAZZLING PUBLIC IDOL TOTTERING AND ABOUT TO FALL

Women Assert That Judge Frazer in His Eagerness to Save Boys Neglects Unfortunate Girls and Leaves Them to Their Own Resources.

Judge Arthur L. Frazer, the cynosure of admiring eyes, the hero of mothers of hopeless boys, the hero of reformed youths, the idol of philanthropically inclined women, the terror of the Philistine forces, has held his pedestal unchallenged for a long time. But now it seems to shake slightly and totter beneath him, and those who command to address the Woman's club on the subject of his work in the juvenile court. The consternation of the women knew no bounds, however, when he appeared and talked only of instances of young boys and girls going astray and launched forth into a strong argument against the carelessness of mothers in the rearing of their children. Some of the women arose in the midst of his address and made remonstrance, asking if the blame were in no way the father's, and others left the room openly in the midst of the speech. A motion for adjournment was made by one woman immediately upon the conclusion of the address, leaving no time for remarks or thanks, and then she left the room without waiting for the motion to be put. It was said that the address was immodest and directed cruelly and unjustly against womankind. The indignation felt then was great, but the women whose cheeks burned with shame refused to discuss the things that had been said. One statement was that 10 boys were easier to save than one girl—seemed the center of indignant comment, and the hearers thought it carried with it a question of the worth of saving the one girl.

Juvenile Court Boys—Ready to Start for an Outing at Gearhart Park. This Crowd Is the Third to Enjoy a Vacation by the Sea. The Boys Left This Morning.

Say He Favors Boys.
The matter was given no further consideration at the time, but recently there came a statement that the little boys were to be given an outing by the juvenile court and there would be three companies of them at different times; that after they had been "holidays" some of the little girls would be taken, if there were any funds left. One lot has been selected from those who have been before the juvenile court on charges of delinquency. There may yet be a camp of girls taken, and if we should do so we would be careful to select girls who have not been before the juvenile court on charges of that sort, so that there could be no possibility of casting any reflection on any of the little girls who might be taken.

Careful Even With Boys.
"Even among our boys we do not choose those who are morally degenerate and likely to have had influence or cause reflections to be cast on the boys who go. We do not discriminate between boys who have been wards of the juvenile court and those who have not been. Many boys have been taken who have never been wards of the court or complained about in any way."
The judge, quite unconscious of the storm of modesty aroused against him when he gave his address before the Woman's club last spring, tells that he did speak strongly and intended to, for

been long in reaching and had tried to stave off, that he was unfair and narrow. "He cares nothing for girls," she declared, "and doesn't think them worth the saving, all his attention is given to boys, because in seven years or so they will be voters and they are worth buying up now. The girls will grow up into women and will have no voice especially if the judge has his wish, for he is openly opposed to woman suffrage; in fact, to go a step farther he seems to think women most inferior and not worth the trouble of bothering about, either as girls or grown women."

They Indignantly Protest.
All this and much more the women claim and indignantly protest against. It is time, they say, to awaken the judge to a better sense of fairness and justice, and if he cannot be corrected in his ways another man who raises boys and girls alike should be put in his place. The judge, they say, has even expressed his impatience with women who are connected with him in the work of the juvenile court, and openly wished there were none there.

Judge Frazer has been approached on the matter of giving the summer outings to boys alone, and he defends himself thus:
"The question of taking girls for a free outing has been given careful consideration, and while there are many little girls in the city who would be greatly benefited by such an outing, we have been advised by thinking women who are deeply interested in our work. A general impression exists that children who are taken on these vacations are selected from those who have been before the juvenile court on charges of delinquency. There may yet be a camp of girls taken, and if we should do so we would be careful to select girls who have not been before the juvenile court on charges of that sort, so that there could be no possibility of casting any reflection on any of the little girls who might be taken."

then he had an audience of women, mostly mothers, and so strongly does he feel on the subject of little girls that he could not impress too strongly upon these women the importance of their care. So far from neglecting the little girls his heart is torn by their sad cases that he grasped that opportunity to tell the state of things as plainly and as strongly as possible. He refused to say anything for publication about his work with the little girls in justification of himself, but hoped and wished the women would come to the court to see for themselves the work being done for the little girls and the difficulty of getting at a girl who is morally delinquent. "They are more than welcome to come and see what they can do," said Judge Frazer this morning. "So far from not wanting women in the court, I wish they would come and take some of these little girls off our hands and do what they can do. My heart is torn with the pitifulness of their cases, for they are so hard to deal with and I would do anything to help them. But the women do not seem to be willing to take these little charges to work with. I want their help; have always asked for it; and have continually pointed forth the necessity of having a paid woman worker here. If I must be criticized and condemned because I am not in favor of woman suffrage it is a misfortune that cannot be helped, but I wish these women would come and see for themselves."

PROHIBITION AIDS KANSAS CITY

State Official Claims That the Prosperous Community Does Not Face Bankruptcy.

A dispatch published recently in The Journal stating that Kansas City, Kansas, was drifting into bankruptcy on account of prohibition brings the following response from Assistant Attorney-General C. W. Trickett of Kansas City:
"There is very little truth in the article. This city has a population of 50,000 instead of 55,000; it has a bonded indebtedness of only $2,500,000, instead of $4,750,000. Of the $2,500,000 the city is only guarantor upon $1,750,000, leaving something like $800,000 of actual bonded indebtedness of this city. During the past year the city paid off something like $200,000 of its bonded debt, and will pay an equal sum this year. "The revenues of the city will be decreased somewhat this year by reason of the fact that we have a Democratic administration, and in their desire to please the taxpayers they have reduced the assessed valuation of all property to such an extent that the levy will not raise the sum that was raised last year."
"The closing of the 'joints' of this city, which is an accomplished fact, has nothing to do with the revenues of the city. There was a judgment rendered by the supreme court of this state several months ago enjoining the city from receiving directly or indirectly, any revenue from the illicit sale of liquor, and disobedience of this order would forfeit the city charter. Therefore, if there were a million 'joints' running in this city it would not increase the revenue one dollar."
"The price of residence real estate has advanced by reason of the closing of the 'joints' and the driving out of the gambling dens and houses of ill-fame."
"City Improved Greatly."
"I have talked with many merchants of this city and but one (outside of the ice dealer) reports the closing of the 'joints' as having a bad effect upon him. That one was a cigar manufacturer, who sold almost exclusively to the 'joints'; in addition, he signed their bonds and suits are now pending to collect same from him."
"In the past I have not been an ardent prohibitionist, and the work that I have been doing was simply that called for by the oath of office which I took, but I am satisfied from the changed conditions in this city that the enforcement of the law and the driving out of these pests is a great thing for this city."

HUNTINGTON CASE IS TO BE HEARD AGAIN

(Special Dispatch to The Journal)
Pendleton, Or., Aug. 16.—The famous Huntington bond case from Baker county will be carried to the supreme court once more, according to J. E. Raley, one of the attorneys for the bondsmen. At the last trial before Judge Ellis the jury awarded Baker county a judgment for the entire amount of the Huntington shortage, together with interest, a sum close to $12,000. The basis of the appeal will be that the bond of the ex-sheriff was not legally delivered and consequently the bondsmen are not liable.
