

JUNGLE KING FIGHTS FOUR MEN WHO STRIVE TO SET BROKEN LEG

(Journal Special Service.) New York, Aug. 18.—Enough morphine and atropine to kill an ordinary man had to be administered to put to sleep a big Bengal tiger, "Heinrich," so that veterinary surgeons might perform an operation on his left foreleg.

The operation was performed in Boston's animal arena, where Heinrich is employed as one of the star performers in Hendrickson's tiger group. "Tamm," the fiercest tiger in the lot, bit a hole in comrade Heinrich's leg recently. Two operations were performed, but unsuccessfully, to put the injured member back into proper gear. Dr. Henry Amling of No. 4238 Park avenue then advised that the leg be let alone and that it might work back into form itself. A few weeks ago, however, the animal's condition became so serious that a final operation was decided on.

When Heinrich was brought outside to be tackled by the surgeons the bone was protruding through the flesh. He rolled his brown eyes round pitifully until they fell upon the medical kit. Then he started to snarl and snarl.
