Fibally, however, it developed that his journeyings took him somewhere back of the Trout Lake country, and after his return from one of these trips it became whispered around that he had brought back with him several hundred dollars in gold suggets. When questioned about it Mathlas was silent, but it became known that he had suddenly accumu-lated considerable money, and each summer saw him disappear in the upper White Selmon valley to return with more gold. Efforts to follow him and locate his hidden mine proved futile, and many who sought after gold in the foot-hills of Mount Adams returned empty handed. C. W. the maiser to establish bureaus for the protection of German Immigrant girls, has gone to Utah, where she will carry out the second part of her mission and investigate polygamy and Mormonism. Miss Winkler has been in conference with the federal authorities, and has secured President Roesevelt's promise to cooperate in her investigation. Upon her return to New York, within a few weeks, she will launch an active crusade in New York, on behalf of the German government, against the white slave traffic. Miss Helen Gould is said to be one of her supporters in this ermind. The German committee has received information that a hotel in this city and a laundry in Chicago are the two centers of the slave markst in this country. Miss Winkler's first task will be to lo-cate and overthrow these two estab-lishments. Miss Winkler mid: Miss Winkler said:

patented a floating battery which de-serves more than passing notice. It is essentially a floating fort, its general construction being above in the illus-tration. As a protection for harbors and coasts it should be septicially use-ful. In use it is anohored at a pre-determined spot, and there remains un-til removed. It is amply protected by armor plate, and the batteries are sup-ported upon invisible platforms. The section protruding above the water line offers a minimum resistance to hostilis minsiles, while its circular form affords a means of sighting hostile years in designers are adopting entirely
