FAKE LIST IS CAUSE OF DEAL OF TROUBLE

Almost Hundred Thousand Pieces of Mail Returned to Committee Because Fake Addresses of Policyholders Were Given.

Great difficulty is being encountered by the international policy-holders committee, of which Richard Olney is chairman, in securing communication with the Oregon policy-holders, who are carrying between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 insurance in the New York Life and the Motus! Life Insurance companies. The policy-holders committee, which is making a strenuous effort to secure proxies and change the administration, has been furnished with what is believed to be a bogus list of the policy-holders. It appeals to real policy-holders who have not received its circulars, and asks them to place themselves immediately in communication with the committee.

In a committee relates the troubles it has had in securing the mames and addresses of policy-holders, and tells how it was forced to appeal to the supreme court of New York; how the insurance company officers, under an order of the policy-holders and their addresses, and how this list proved to be largely fictitious.

"This committee, with about 30 ad-how this list proved to be largely fictitious.

"This committee, with about 36 addresses and postoffice experis, has been emaged for two menths in an effort to made corrections in these lists, and about 25,000 of such corrections have been made through this source," says the committee. "In the face of these facts, when our circulars were malied to policy-holders, 97,311 pieces of mail were returned to us undelivered through the postoffice department for want of correct addresses. The filing of these incorrect lists and the practice of this piece of chicanery on the part of these companies, in effect disfranchises thousands of qualified voters in two corporations, owing to the inability of this committee to piace in the hands of the policy-holders a simple form of ballot that can be voted in the election."

The committee asks all policy-holders to forward their addresses to the secretary's office, 30 Broad street, New York. Portland policy-holders are not showing an active interest in the election, so far as can be learned, and it is doubtful if they have thus far sent their proxies in very large numbers to either the reform faction or the old management of the two big insurance companies.

Frank D. Gibbs, of Tull & Gibbs, who carries a policy in the New York Life, carries a policy in the New York Life, said:

'I have received requests from the policy-holders' committee and also from the present administration officers, that I should forward my proxy for their use in voting at the coming election. Thus far I have not sent a proxy to either faction. I am not sure the reform management will be any better than the old. I only know that I am paying twice as much money for life insurance as I should have to pay, and that I have entered into a contract to keep it up, which I will doubtless do. When I take any more life insurance it will be from a home company here in Oregon. There is no reason why we on this coast should continue to send our insurance money down to New York to be used in speculation in Wall street. It might better be kept here for speculation in Oregon development."

ELLEN BEACH YAW CONCERT AT HEILIG

The Elien Beach Yaw concert last night was clearly a disappointment to everyone in the house.

Led to expect much in a professional way, the public was disappointed at getting so much that was amateurish. Some found it positively painful—the very word used—to sit through the program which could inspire but little enthusiasm. Doubtless many felt with me that they would like to start off an electric battery under the feet of the whole concert to put some life and variety into it. I fait myself sighing—"If only she would get off the key or do anything to wake us up!"

But Miss Yaw's faults were, with all that, negative faults. It was only what she lacked that made the concert tiresome. Musical taste was lacking when she insisted on dressing every song with a few extra frills in the most unsuitable places only to show her high range. And the audience knew from the start what she could do in that way, so what was the use of "rubbing it in." And she showed a lack of professional taste when she responded to her first recall with an emoore, at the same time showing her over-eagerness and placing the audience in a have-to position for the rest of the program.

But still the fact remains that Miss ing her over-eagerness and placing the audience in a have-to position for the rest of the program.

But still the fact remains that Miss Yaw has the highest register of any soprane and that her voice possesses unusual limpidity and flexibility. Personally, I do not care for colorature work—I would rather hear it on the flute where it can be absolutely perfect. Yet I must take off my hat to Miss Yaw (and that is no longer a masculine expression since women must remove their bonnets in the theatres) for the wonderful mechanism of that voice. Her rightful sphere is the Italian opera. The aria from "Traviata" was so svidently superior to what she had done before and gave her voice such splendid opportunity for its best display work that one was led to believe that had someone made up a fitting program for her she might have been quite pleasing. Her middle register, which for almost anyone else would be the high register, has her best notes and these were of beautiful quality. Some of her songs showed her acting ability favorably and came as a relief. Her quaint appearance from her braided hair and piquant face to her quaintly-made gown was in her favor when she resorted to pretty childlike acting.

Her*violinist, Victor Schertzinger, won much favor. A very young man, he played with an ease and flency quite enviable, though his playing lacked virility. Then he spoiled the previously good impression with a pittful attempt to play the "Traumeret" with air and accompaniment all on the violin. His first encore, a Pierne Sersnade, was one of the best things he did. The pianiste and accompaniment all on the violin. His first encore, a Pierne Sersnade, was one of the best things he did. The pianiste and accomunist was Mrs. Theophilus Masac, but her work sadly lacked human interest throughout.
