"Jeffries still in the ring if there's any lingle of coin," said a headline some time since. Jeff never was very noisy outside of the ring.

to be the best fight of the fall season when the promoters of the southern California town secured the Burns-O'Brien battle for Thanksgiving day. These two men have been throwing a bunch of hot words promiscuously around the country until the public haif believed that they didn't mean to do business. But upon the offers of the Los Angeles club of a $12,000 purse both men decided to opme to the front with the goods, and unless a hitch occurs the contest is now sure to take place. The rules to govern the battle place. The rules to govern the battle are very decisive and that it will be fair and without clinching or delay is shown by the demands of both and the agreeent that upon the first two failures of either to break at the command of the referee the guilty one is to be warned. A third offense will mean the decision to the other man. Both O'Brien and Burns are of the clever and shifty sort and a lively battle should be the result if both are in good shape, Unnecessary excuses frequently are made that the West Point players are made that the West Point players are handicapped by little time for practice. Perhaps the same handicap would do some of the big college teams good. On the other hand it is a fact that a bigger proportion of students play football at West Point than at any other institution in the country. Nearly a third of the entire enrollment playsalmost fails.

Gans is indignant over the pictures of the fight which have been exhibited and says that he is now receiving an even worse deal than that handed him at Goldfield. "Of course, every one says that the blow in the pictures, called the final one, was not foul. The blow shown is not the foul—it is the second one of three struck me by Nelson in that round. Throughout the pictures have been doctored, and some parts of rounds being cut out and other shifts being made. In the last round of the contest Nelson struck me good blows, the first one the chest, the second lower dowr, while the final one was squarely in the groin. In the picture the second blow is shown, then the film has been cut to give the appearance that it was that blow which sent me down. Not one of all the newspaper men at the ringside thought the blow was anything else than a deliberate foul, and none of them sent out any stories to that effect. Isn't it queer that nothing should have been heard regarding the foul blow being anything but what Siler claimed it was until the pictures were many miles from the scene of the battle?"

Mrs. Hibber was the original discover of gold in California, though her name was unwritten in history, and her claim was unknown except in her own family. In 1845, a girl of 14, she was playing along the banks of Bear creek, near Donner lake in the Sierra Madre range in that state, when she found, what in telling of it a short time before her death she described as shining particles of coarse bran. This was the first known discovery of gold in California. Three years later Marshall, the man accredited with making the discovery on the banks of Sutton creek, in February, found the first gold in California, of which history tells.

In 1846 Mrs. Hibber, with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Trueman Bonney, came across the plains in a covered wagon from Canton, Illinois, where she spent her early life. It was at the time when the state was in a turmoli from the Mexican war, and they were forced to stop at Sutter's Fort, which was then under General Fremont. At Sutter's Fort the little girl found gold. Parties suggested that some of the gold be assayed, and Dr. Gildes, a member of the party in the fort, started with some of it to Monterey to have it assayed. On the way he died of mountain fever, and its value was never known.

Hibbler, to whom Marian Benney had been married at Woodbine in 1847, and Mrs. Hibbler's brother, Bradford Benney, went back to California, to the place on Bear creek, where they operated a placer mine until 1852, taking out thousands of dellars. Then they returned to Oregon, where Mr. Hibbler opened a stock ranch in Tamhill county, where for years he resided. He died in 1872, leaving his wife and 10 children. Following a suit for $19,000 against the United Railways company, L. Y. Keady and others have filed a second suit for $15,000. The first suit was filed on Thursday last and was alleged to be due on an agreement of the United Railways to pay the stockholders of the Oregon Traction company the amount of their cash subscriptions to the latter, corporation, such payment to be made in consideration of their consent to the sale of the property of the Oregon Traction company at public sale.

The second suit is for $15,000 for services rendered the United Railways by Keady and Thomas McCusker in having sureties in the sum of $100,000 to insure the granting of the Front street franchise, which was passed over to the United Railways by the city council last summer. The franchise was signed by Mayor Lane on June 5, and 30 days were allowed the petitioners to raise the amount.

Keady and McCusker allege that the company engaged them to raise the amount, agreeing to pay a reasonable fee therefor. The sum was raised by the plaintiffs, who, thereby, prevented the franchise from being lost by default. Martin L. Pipes is attorney for pisintiffs.
